Wood, Andrew, of Darlington. Sermon, Lon., 1755, 8vo.

Wood, Mrs. Anne T. See WILBUR, MISS ANNE T.

Wood, or a Wood, Anthony, b. in Oxford, Dec. 17, 1632, was matriculated at Merton College, Oxford, 1647; graduated A.B. 1652; and M.A. 1655, and employed the rest of his life chiefly in recording the history of the edifices and scholars of his beloved city. Disturbed in his literary pursuits by the announcement that his days were numbered, he "immediately sent to a very good man, his confidant, to pray with him, appointing his hours; received the sacrament the next morning very devoutly; made his Will; went into his study with his two friends, Mr. Base and Mr. Tanser, to that vast multitude of Papers, Notes, Letters,—about two bushels full he ordered for the fire to be lighted as he was expiring, which was accordingly done, he expressing both his knowledge and his approbation of what was done by throwing out his hands."—Dr. A. Charlett in Archbishop Tenison, Dec. 1, 1695: Nichols's Hist. of Lit. Hist., iii. 413.

1. Historia et Antiquitates Universitatis Oxoniensis, duobus Voluminibus comprehensa, Oxonii, 1674, f4: some l. p., r. fol. This translation in Latin was made by Mr. Wase and Mr. Peers, under the supervision of Dr. John (afterwards Bishop) Fell, from Wood's English original, (which employed him about ten years. Wood complained that both of these persons altered and added to suit their own tastes.

"I cannot omit the opportunity of lamenting that Dr. Fell ever proposed a translation of Wood's English work, when would have been infinitely more pleasing in the plain natural dress of its artless but accurate author. The translation in general is allowed to be full of mistakes: it is also stiff and unpleasant, perpetually disgusting the reader with its affected phraseology."—DR. THOMAS WARTON.

"Above all, this famous university is chiefly indebted to the indefatigable pains of honest Anthony Wood: whose industry, joined with Camden's learning and judgment, would have made a complete English antiquary. His Historia et Antiquitates Universitatis Oxoniensis gives abundantly more than the whole tribe of the fore-mentioned authors could afford us; and in its large books runs through every particular of her story. The author himself complained of several additions and alterations made without his privity and consent; and some say that his own English copy, the language whereof, I believe, was not over-charming, would some time or other have been published."—*BISHOP NICOLSON: Eng. Wood therefore made a new copy of his English MS., and nearly a hundred years after his demise it was given to the world: I. The History and Antiquities of the Colleges and Halls in the University of Oxford, by Anthony Wood, M.A., published in English, with a Continuation to the Present Time, by John Gutch, M.A., with an appendix containing Fasti Oxonienses and Index 174, 4to; Appendix, 1790, 4to. II. The History and Antiquities of the University of Oxford, in two Books by Anthony à Wood, now first published in English from the Original MS. in the Bodleian Library, 1792-93, 2 vols. in 3, 4to. yet that so far (December, 1870) we have no sent of this greatly-desired "new edition," in ich the volumes of Nichols's Lit. Anec. and Lit., (Gent. Mag., e.g. 1860, ii. 612; 1861, i. nd ii. 370, 621,) and Notes and Queries should y scrutinized. We must find room for a few n so famous a book.

He, his books are little more than a medley of notes, fragments, and scraps, which have been sent in from several correspondents, without being digested into any other method than that in which they were received. It is no blemish on his memory to find that he had his share of that poverty and austerity, which is commonly incident to genius; and thus much we ought gratefully to acknowledge, as he furnished us with a larger stock of useful information than any one man of this age has collected. On such an occasion, he paid sufficiently for his genius, by the loss of his health, and it is illegal to deprive him of a suitable penance for having already performed. —BISHOP NEWTON: *Eng. Hist. "In the State Paper Office in London. It is reported, there may be seen a lady with copying clerk under her control, engaged in deciphering, epitomizing, and cataloguing the important parchment State papers and records of several countries back. This lady, about twenty-five years ago, published a work entitled 'Letters of Royal and Illustrious Ladies,' which attracted the attention of competent judges for the patient care in selecting authorities and the extensive range of historical research displayed by the authoress. Subsequently, in visiting the State Paper Office, to examine papers, the lady exhibited unusual skill in deciphering old manuscripts, and all the above qualifications combined to point her out as a suitable person to pursue antiquarian researches. She was, therefore, appointed by the British Government as a clerk in the State Paper Office, and she is the only female on the staff of that Department.
The above instance has been cited to show that women are qualified to fill positions heretofore supposed only suitable for men."—July 23, 1870.

b. at Riverstown, co. of Meath, Ireland, 1716, and educated at Oxford, in 1750, in conjunction with his friends Dawkins and Bouverie, made the antiquarian expedition of which he left lasting memorials in his works on Palmyra and Basilbec. In 1759, whilst engaged on his Essay on Homer, most unfortunately for the interests of letters, (for he had planned other classical works,) the Earl of Chatham made him Under-Secretary of State, and this post he retained during three administrations.

Wood, William B., b. in Montreal, May 26, 1779, after a short experience of mercantile life in the counting-house of John Pintard, of the city of New York, (supra), became connected with Wignell's theatrical company at Annapolis in 1798, and in December of the same year made his first appearance on the Philadelphia stage, where he acted with great success for many years; was manager of theatres in Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, 1810-30; finally abandoned the stage, Nov. 18, 1846, and spent the remainder of his life, which terminated Sept. 23, 1861, in retirement, cheered by the respect and attentions of his fellow-citizens in Philadelphia.

Among the many plays altered and adapted to the American stage by Mr. Wood were the following: Schiller's Robbers, and The Minister, or Cabal and Love, (acted as The Harper's Daughter), by the same; Joanna Baillie's De Montfort, and her Family Legend; Lord Byron's Two Foscari; Kotzebue's Count Benzowsky. "On the retirement of the Disraeli ministry, Wood was appointed Lord Chancellor, with the title of Baron Hatherly. The selection is believed to be a judicious one. Wood, though not ranking high as an orator, has shown himself to be a sound and able lawyer, most honest and conscientious, and wonderfully industrious and painstaking. "Under a very modest guise, this volume contains a condensed and forcible argument in support of the Divine authority of the Holy Scriptures and of the truth of the Christian interpretation of them. Such a work deserves, for several reasons, an especial welcome. Here is a man of conspicuous ability and a singularly judicial habit of mind, who has devoted a good deal of time to religious studies, and who pronounces an unhesitating conviction that the old doctrines are unshaken, and that the critics, whatever their learning, are very untrustworthy in their logic. He has thus rendered the Church an immense service, and has earned from her a debt of deep gratitude."—Lon. Times.

Sir Philip Francis, long before he was suspected of the authorship of these famous letters, 2 stated to have written thus concerning them:

"What a fine sheet of Junius,—a much overrated over!"—Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1842, 304.

Woodfall, Henry Sampson, publisher of the Public Advertiser. See J. Francis, (p. 1002.) In his Detraction (ed. 1772, 2 vols. sm. 8vo) Junius remarks, ut supra.

"This book will, I believe, be found to contain more worthy to be transmitted to posterity. . . . This is not the language of vanity. If I am a vain man, my gratification is within a narrow circle. I am the sole depository of my secret, and it shall perish with me."

Ninety-eight years have since passed, and the authorship of Junius is as great a mystery as ever, 1871. That Sir Philip Francis was the anonymous and constant (ignorant of his principal) of Junius is not improbable. To the authorities cited in our article of Junius we add, *John's Lowndes's Bibl. "Dr. Woods has erected an enduring monument to his memory which we doubt not will long be cherished with affection and respect. All the works here collected bear the impress of a perspicuous, wise, and devout mind, and may be recommended to a very large class of readers as a storehouse of theological truth. We hope to have an opportunity of presenting an extended estimate of the character of these volumes."—PROFESSOR HODGE: Princeton Review.

"The works of Dr. Woods have to me, I must say, a peculiar charm. They have a vividness of thought and language, as well as an accuracy of Scriptural truth and a healthy analysis of theological system, which very many readers will be prepared to value."—REV. DR. BRADEN.

"We earnestly recommend these valuable works to our younger ministers, and especially to students in theology: for our judgment, they cannot find an uninspired guide more worthy of their acquaintance and their confidence."—Lon. Evan. Mag.

"It was a kind providence for the New England churches that . . . a man like Dr. Woods was called to the chair of theology in the seminary at Andover. He is emphatically the 'judicious' divine of the later New England theology. He educated a generation of preachers (more than 1000 in number) who had neither crochets nor airy aims."—HENRY A. SEXTON, D.D.: Amer. Theol. Rev., Jan. 1862, 48.

Dr. Woods left in MS., almost complete, a History of the Theological Seminary in Andover. This has since (1870) been given to the world. Whence the delay? To the article on Mrs. M. W. Woodward, John, M.D., an eminent geologist, founder of the professorship of geology at Cambridge, was b. in Derbyshire, 1665, and studied philosophy, anatomy, and physic under Dr. Peter Barwick, in whose house he was resident, and chiefly by whose influence he was in 1692 elected Professor of Physic in Gresham College; d. 1728. 1. An Essay towards a Natural History of the Earth and Terrestrial Bodies, especially Minerals, as also of the Sea, Rivers, and Springs; with an Account of the Universal Deluge, and of the Effects that it had upon the Earth, Lon., 1695, 8vo; 2d ed., 1702, 8vo; 3d ed., 1723, 8vo; 4th ed., 1726, 8vo. In Latin, by J. J. Scheuchzer, Historia Telluris, &c., Tiguri, 1704, 8vo. See ARNDTSON, JOHN, M.D., add 1695, 8vo; 1697, 8vo; HUTCHINSON, JOHN; ROBINSON, THOMAS, No. 2. It was also attacked by Dr. Martin Lister, in three pieces. All these objections were answered by John Harris, D.D., in his Remarks on some Late Papers relating to the Universal Deluge, and to the Natural History of the Earth, 1697, 8vo. The Latin translation, 1704, 8vo, elicited some objections from Leibnitz and others, (expressed in letters to the author; and Elias Camerarius, of Tübingen, attacked it in some Latin dissertations printed in 1712. Woodward replied in 2. Naturalis Historia Telluris illustrata et aucta: unicum ejusdem defensione: praesertim contra nuperas objectiones El. Camerarii, Lon., 1714, 8vo. In English, by Benjamin Holloway, with an Introduction, &c., and Supplement and Continuation supplied by Woodward, 1726, 8vo. See Camerarius's address in the German Ephemerides, 1717; Edin. Rev., xxix. 316; MORTON, JOHN, No. 1. In speaking of the origin of the Indians, Dr. Cotton Mather expresses the opinion that the subject would be settled when Woodward should publish his Natural History. The work introduced important truths: it is no marvel that it should also contain some grave errors. It was intended only as a precursor to a great work on the same subject, for which he was gathering materials until death would wait no longer;—the old story, (see BAKER, THOMAS; COLE, WILLIAM.)

"The Essays here brought together originally appeared in the New Engländer, [1867-68,] where they attracted wide attention from the exactness and thoroughness with which they discussed the legal effects of this great question, as well as from the sound discrimination displayed in the examination of its social aspects."—Publishers' Advert.

"The book does not strike us as one of very remarkable ability or power, and the author's style is rather heavy and unattractive. The most reliable portion is, we think, the historical part. The legal portion is of little real use to a lawyer, and the doctrinal and exegetical portions are in many respects meagre, and do not include a sufficient consideration of any of the most delicate and difficult of the considerations involved."—*Amer. Worcester, Joseph Emerson, LL.D., second son of Jesse Worcester, (supra,) was b. in Bedford, New Hampshire, Aug. 24, 1784; graduated at Yale College, 1811; was for several years engaged in teaching at Salem, Mass., and passed two years at Andover; in 1820 removed to Cambridge, Mass., and resided there for the most part until his death, Oct. 27, 1865.

His works (we give below the dates of the first and of some of the later editions) have done much to promote public and private education; and the verdict pronounced thirty years since by an eminent critic would be endorsed by many at the present moment:

"In all his publications he has exhibited a conscientious use of accuracy, as well as intelligence, which has stamped them with a superior value in the estimation of those whose favorable judgment in matters of this sort is most to be desired."—Q. W. B. PEABODY: N. Amer. Rev., xli. (Oct. 1855) 484.

"This Dictionary is formed on a plan similar to that of the Universal and Critical Dictionary of the author [No. 14, supra] published in 1846; but it is much larger and more comprehensive. The 'Universal Dictionary' contains, in addition to the words found in Todd's edition of Johnson's Dictionary, nearly 27,000 words, for which authorities are given. In addition to these, this work contains about 19,000 words, which have been derived from a great variety of sources; the total number being about 104,000. Authorities are given for almost all the words that are inserted. . . . He has availed himself of the aid of the following collaborators or assistants,—namely, Messrs. RICHARD BULL, JR., WILLIAM A. WHEELER, LOOMIS J. CAMPBELL, WILLIAM F. BART, JOSEPH HALE ABBOT, and JOHN S. DWIGHT, who have afforded great assistance in the preparation of the work. The author would also express his acknowledgments to," &c.—Preface, ii., vi., (q. r.)

Of this admirable work, which, with the other lexicographical guides noticed on a preceding page, (Worcester, Noah, LL.D., No. 37,) should form a part of the literary treasures of every household, we have before us many eclogues from eminent authorities. New ed., Parts 1, 2, 3, 4, in 2 vols. imp. 8vo, 1862, £4; with Index, 1867, 4s. &c. The bibliotist must place beside these valuable volumes the Greek Testaments of Bishop Ellicott, Dean Alford, and Dr. Cardwell.

"In Dr. Wordsworth the Patristic spirit of interpretation predominates; in Bishop Ellicott, . . . the sound old English theology of the seventeenth century; in Dean Alford, the German element. But none of them excludes the others. All 4 men have entered into that haunted chamber of German thought, which only requires to be unlocked and thrown open to the light, to lose its fascinations and terrors. All of them have met formidable phantoms of textual criticism, with its 120,000 various readings in the New Testament alone, and will enable us to march up to it and discover that it is empty air,—that it is as may any with the boldest and acutest of English critics. Bentley, 'Choose (out of the whole MSS.) as awkwardly as you will, choose the worst by design out of the whole lump of readings, and not one article of faith or moral precept is either lost or perverted in them. Put them in the hands of a knave or a fool, and even with the most sinistrous and absurd choice, he shall not extinguish the light of any one chapter, or so darken Christianity but that every feature of it will still be seen.'—Lon. Quar. Rev., April, 1863, art. iv.: Editions of the Greek Testament.

"Wordsworth, rich in solid matter, depends too much upon the past: he is often patristic to the point of feebleness. Alford, whose plan is admirable, wears too often the air of one who is crammed for the occasion,—whose scholarship lies on his mind and is not fully in him. In clearness, ripe judgment, and precision, we give Ellicott the first rank. As books to read, his commentaries are less pleasing than either of the others: as books to study, they are models."—CHARLES P. KEARNEY, D.D.: Latham, Mar. 24, 1862.

Wordsworth, William, D.C.L., second son of John Wordsworth, attorney-at-law, and law-agent to Sir James Lowther, afterwards Earl of Lonsdale, by Anne Cookson, of the Crackanorpes of Westmoreland, was b. at Cockermouth, Cumberland, April 7, 1770; studied at St. John's College, Cambridge, from Oct. 1787 till Jan. 1791, and subsequently spent fifteen months in France; in 1795 inherited, from an admirer of his genius, £900, which, with his share of £8500 paid to the family by the second Lord Lonsdale on account of a debt due by his father's estate, enabled him to live without recourse to a profession; in 1795 settled with his only sister Dorothy (his beloved intellectual associate for many happy years) at Racedown Lodge, near Crewkerne, Dorsetshire; and in 1799, after returning from a visit to Germany, in which he was accompanied by Coleridge and Mrs. Wordsworth, took up his residence at Grasmere, where he remained until 1808, when he removed to Allan Bank, his home for the next five years; in 1813 he settled at Rydal Mount, and here—with the exception of occasional visits to London, a second tour in Scotland in 1814, a continental tour in 1820, a tour in Holland and Belgium in 1823, in North Wales in 1824, on the Rhine in 1828, in Ireland in 1829, in Scotland in 1833, in Italy in 1837, &c.—he remained until his death, in his 81st year, April 23, 1850. He was Stamp Distributor for the Counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland (worth about £500 per annum) from 1813 until 1842, when he resigned in favour of his younger son; in 1843 he succeeded Southey as Poet-Laureate; and he enjoyed a Government pension of £300 a year until his death. In 1803 he was married to Miss Mary Hutchinson, whom he had known in her childhood, and by this lady he had five children, viz.: I. John, b. 1803; II. Dora, (see QUILLINAN, MRS. DORA.) b. 1804; III. Thomas, b. 1806; IV. Catherine, b. 1808; V. William, b. 1810. His wife, (d. 1859, aged 88,) his sister Dorothy, (d. 1855, aged 84,) and two of his sons survived him. In his early days he was a warm republican, and an admirer of the French Revolution; but his opinions became more "conservative" and "orthodox;" and for the last forty or fifty years of his life he zealously supported the Established Church, and died in its bosom. In 1818 he published, in the Conservative interest, Two Addresses to the Freeholders of Westmoreland. Accustomed for many years to unsparring ridicule, (which he had learned to endure with philosophical equanimity,) the standing target for reviewers, (from the formidable Jeffrey of the Edinburgh to the anonymous scribbler for the Monthly,) and the butt of literary and social circles, he lived long enough to exchange contempt for honour, and excessive denunciation for equally extravagant laudation. The failure of a late conversion is not favourable to solonate criticism; and a long-despised minority it hard to exercise the toleration from which they revelled so rigorously excluded:

"—no render justice to Professor Wilson, as well as to not for a moment, not by a solitary movement of re-... or demand, did either of us hang back in giving that acclamation which we, by so many years, had anticipated;

yes, we singly—we, with no sympathy to support us from any quarter. The public press remains, with its inexorable records, to vouch for us, that we paid an oriental homage as to one who could have pleaded antique privilege, and the commemoration of centuries, at a time when the finger of scorn was pointed at Mr. Wordsworth from every journal in the land; and that we persisted in this homage at a period long enough removed to have revolutionized the public mind, and also long enough to have undermined the personal relations between us of confidential friendship. Did it ask no courage to come forward, in the first character, as solitary friends, holding up our protesting hands amidst a wilderness of chattering buffoons?"—Dr. Quixcr: Lit. Reminisc.: William Wordsworth.

But to these two early eulogists of Wordsworth's poetry there is to be added—not to name Coleridge, Talfourd, and others—at least one admirer whose devotion was profound, unflinching, and reverential,—the poet himself:

"Wordsworth came at half-past eight, and stopped to breakfast; talked a good deal; spoke of Byron's plagiarisms from him; the whole third canto of 'Childe Harold' founded on his style and sentiments; the feeling of natural objects which is there expressed, not caught by B. from nature herself, but from him, (Wordsworth,) and spoiled in the transposition; 'Tintern Abbey' the source of it all; from which same poem, too, the celebrated passage about Solitude, in the first canto of 'Childe Harold,' is (he said) taken, with the difference that what is naturally expressed by him has been worked by Byron into a laboured and antithetical sort of declamation. . . . We (Moore and Lady Davy) talked of Wordsworth's exceedingly high opinion of himself; and she mentioned that one day, in a large party, Wordsworth, without anything having been previously said, could lead to the subject, called out suddenly from the top of the table to the bottom, in his most epic tone, 'Davy!' and on Davy's putting forth his head, in awful expectation of what was coming, said, 'Do you know the reason why I published 'The White Doe' in quarto?' 'No; what was it?' 'To show the world my own opinion of it.'—Memoirs, &c. of T. Moore, (Diary, Oct. 27, 1829,) iii. 161, 163.

"After a while he (Professor Wilson) depressed to Wordsworth and Southey, and asked me [N. P. Willis] if I was going to return by the Lakes. I proposed doing so; 'I will give you letters to both, if you haven't them. I lived a long time in that neighbourhood, and know Wordsworth perhaps as well as any one. Many a day I have walked over the hills with him, and listened to his repetition of his own poetry.' . . . 'Did Wordsworth repeat any other poetry than his own?' 'Never in a single instance, to my knowledge.' 'Was the story true that was told in the papers of his seeing, for the first time, in a large company, some new novel of Scott's in which there was a motto taken from his works, and that he went immediately to the shelf and took down one of his own volumes, and read the whole poem to the party, who were waiting for a reading of the new book?' 'Perfectly true. It happened in this very house. Wordsworth was very angry at the paragraph, and, I believe, accused me of giving it to the world. I was as much surprised as himself, however, to see it in print.'—N. P. Willis's Recollections by the Way: New York Mirror, 1845.

We add a few words on his appearance and conversation:

"NORTH.—Did you ever meet any of the Lake Poets in private society?"

"TICKLER.—Five or six times. Wordsworth has a grave, solemn, pedantic, awkward, out-of-the-worldish look about him, that rather puzzles you as to his probable profession, till he begins to speak,—and then, to be sure, you set him down at once for a Methodist preacher."

"NORTH.—I have seen Chantrey's bust."

"TICKLER.—The bust flatters his head, which is not intellectual. The forehead is narrow, and the skull altogether too scanty. Yet the baldness, the gravity, and the composure are impressive, and, on the whole, not unpoetical. The eyes are dim and thoughtful; and a certain sweetness of smile occasionally lightens up the strong lines of his countenance with an expression of courteousness and philanthropy."

"NORTH.—Is he not extremely eloquent?"

"TICKLER.—Far from it. He labours like a whale spouting,—his voice is wearisomely monotonous,—he does not know when to have done with a subject,—oracularly announces perpetual truisms,—never hits the nail on the head,—and leaves you amazed with all that needless pother, which the simple bard opines to be eloquence, and which passes for such with his Cockney idolaters and his catechumens at Ambleside and Keswick."

"NORTH.—Not during dinner, surely?"

"TICKLER.—Yes,—during breakfast, lunch, dinner, tea, and supper,—every intermediate moment: nor have I any doubt that he prosed all night long in his sleep."

"NORTH.—Shocking, indeed!"—Notes Ambros. No. XXI., Sept. 1825: Blackie Mag., xviii. 383. See, also, xviii. 439.

We will give a specimen—he was modest enough to esteem it a solitary instance—of his wit:

"At a friend's house, after dinner, the conversation turned upon wit and humour. The author of Lalla Rookh, who was present, gave some illustrations from Sheridan's 'savings-banks, and writings.' Starting from his reverie, Wordsworth said that he did not consider himself to be a witty poet; 'indeed,' continued he, 'I do not think I was ever witty but once in my life.' A great desire was naturally expressed by all to know what this special drollery was. After some hesitation, the old poet said, 'Well, well, I will tell you. I was standing some time ago at the entrance of my cottage at Rydal Mount. A man accosted me with the question, 'Pray, sir, have you seen my wife pass by?" Whereupon I said, "Why, my good friend, I didn't know till this moment that you had a wife!" The company started, and finding that the old bard had discharged his entire stock, burst into a roar of laughter, which the Arcturian Wordsworth, in his simplicity, accepted as a genuine compliment to the brilliancy of his wit."

LIST OF WORDSWORTH'S WORKS, WITH CRITICISMS.

1. An Evening Walk: an Epistle in Verse, addressed to a Young Lady from the Lakes of the North of England, Lond., 1793, 4to, pp. 27.

"There are passages in his poem which display imagination, and which afford hope for the future, but, if he can direct himself of all partiality and will critically question every line that he has written, he will find many which he must allow, call loudly for amendment."—Lon. Mon. Rev., 1793, iii. 213.

2. Descriptive Sketches in Verse, taken during a Pedestrian Tour in the Italian, Grison, Swiss, and Savoyard Alps, 1793, 4to, pp. 55.

"During the last year of my residence at Cambridge, 1794, I became acquainted with Mr. Wordsworth's first publication, entitled Descriptive Sketches, and seldom, if ever, was the emergence of an original poetic genius above the literary horizon more evidently announced."—Colburn's Diographic Literature.

So thought not the critic of the Lon. Month. Review, 1793, iii. 216.

3. Lyrical Ballads, with a Few Other Poems, 1798, 12mo, pp. 210; anon., 3d ed., 1800, 2 vols. 12mo; 3d ed., 1802, 2 vols. 12mo. Repub., 1805. The first edition was sold for thirty guineas to Joseph Cottle, who lost by the 500 copies he published. The first piece in the volume is Coleridge's Rime of the Ancient Mariner; the other pieces, 22 in number, are Wordsworth's.

"In much genius and originality are discovered in this publication, that we wish to see another from the same hand, written on more elevated subjects and in a more cheerful disposition."—Lon. Mon. Rev., 1799, ii. 210.

Vol. II. Lyrical Ballads, with other Poems, by W. Wordsworth, 1802, 12mo; vols. 3 and 4, in 1 vol. 12mo, Phila., 1802. Repub. Lond., 1805.

"Not inferior to its precursor."—Lon. Month. Rev., 1802, ii. 30.

See, also, Blackw. Mag., xii. 57, 175, xxvii. 699, 704, xlii. 361.

4. Poems, 1807, 2 vols. 12mo, pp. 320.

"Though the present work may not equal his former efforts, many of the poems possess a native elegance, natural and unaffected, totally devoid of the tinsel embellishments and abstract hyperboles of several contemporary sonnetists."—Lon. Mon. Rev., (not 12) Lon. Lit. Review, Aug. 1807.

"There are certainly some pieces there which are good for nothing, (none, however, which a fast poet could have written,) and very many which it was highly injudicious to publish. . . . The sonnets are in a grand style."—Southey's Letter to Walter Scott, Dec. 8, 1807. Southey's Life and Correspondence, ch. xiii.

"Even in the worst of these productions there are, no doubt, occasional little traits of delicate feeling and original fancy; but these are quite lost and obscured in the mass of childlike and simplicity with which they are incorporated."—Lon. Quarterly Rev., x. 251.

"The attack on Wordsworth [of supra] very unjust and anti-poetical. . . . The Sonnets on Switzerland and on Milton are sublime. Some of the others are in a style of severe simplicity sometimes bordering on the hardness and dryness of some of Milton's sonnets."—Rev. J. Macintosh's Journal, July 2, 1808; Lit. Lib., ch. viii.

5. On the Relations of Great Britain, Spain, and Portugal to Each Other, 1809, 8vo. In favour of the vigorous prosecution of the Peninsular War.

"If Mr. Wordsworth had never written a single verse, this Essay alone would be sufficient to place him in the highest rank of English poets."—W. Wordsworth, D.D.: Mem. of W. Wordsworth, 1851.

"An earnest and eloquent production."—Austin and Ralph's Poets Library, 1853, 414.

"The sentences are long and involved."—R. Southey's Life and Correspondence, ch. xv.

"No half as guide as a leading paragraph in Jamieson Ballantyne's Journal. The sense is want, and so is the wording."—The Edinburgh Review, in Notes and Queries, Oct. 1823. Blackw. Mag., xiv. 486.

It is highly praised in Fraser's Mag., Aug. 1836: not so in Lon. Quarterly. In this year (1809) he contributed an Essay on Epitaphs to Coleridge's Friend. See Lyrical Memorials, by J. Snow, new ed., 1847, 18mo.

6. The Excursion, being a Portion of the Recluse: a Poem, 1814, 4to, pp. 417. 500 copies. 2d ed., 1820, 8vo; new ed., 1841, (p. 8vo, N. York, 1819, 12mo; 1836, 12mo; Lon. 1851, 12mo; 1853, 12mo; 1857, 12mo; 1865, 8vo; 1869, 8vo, with Topographical Notes, 1860, 8vo. First Book of the Excursion, with an Introduction, 1863, 12mo. C. H. Bromby, M.A., 1864, 12mo. Passages from Wordsworth's Excursion; Illust. with Engravings on Steel, by Agnes Fraser, 1850, 4to, 21 ls.; with Indian proof, 21 11s. 6d. See Lon. Athen., 1859, i. 361. As regards the early sale of The Excursion, see Milnes's Journals, (p. 132, quotation from Lord Byron.)

"This will never do. . . . It is longer, heavier, and more than any of Mr. Wordsworth's other productions, with no boldness of originality, and less even of that outward calmness and lowliness of tone which wavered so poetically, in the Lyrical Ballads, between silliness and pathos."—Lon. Quarterly Rev., xxi. 1: repub. in his Contrib. to Edin. Rev., 1862, 4s. (p. v.)

"Jeffrey, I hear, has written what his admirers call a crushing review of The Excursion. He might as well as cut him upon Skiddaw and fling that he crushed the mountains."—R. Southey's Life and Correspondence, ch. xlii.

"In power of intellect, in lofty conception, in the depth of feeling, at once simple and sublime, which pervades every part of it, and which gives to every object an almost preternatural and preternatural interest, this work has seldom been surpassed."—W. H. Halliwell's The Round Table: repub. in Appendix to Vol. IV. of his Miscell. Works, Phila., 1848, 2 vols. 12mo.

"It affords a system without having any (teachable) one, and, instead of unfolding a principle in various and striking lights, repeats the same conclusions till they become flat and insipid. . . . There was something abstruse, and clumsy and ill-judged in the attempt. It was long and laborious. To pronounce, for the most part, were low, the few real ones, the raised expectations which were not fulfilled."—W. H. Halliwell's The Spirit of the Age: William Wordsworth: repub. in vol. v. of supra.

"The Excursion is a series of poems, all combining in the light of poetry; some of them sweet and simple; some elegant and graceful; some beautiful and most lovely; some of strength and state; some majestic; some magnificent; some sublime."—Frederick Whaley's Devotions of George North.

"None.—Or Wordsworth, with his eternal, Ever we go up, and up, and here we go down, down, and here we go round about! Look at the servile mimicry of his Excursion! What interminable prating! The language is out of a school; fat and slow, thick-winded, purled, and pothered. Can he be compared with Pope? 'Pleasant! no, no, no.' Punch, post. "Notes and Queries, Mar. 1859. Blackw. Mag., xlv. 323. 2d ed. xli. 178, xiv. 486, xxv. 323, xxvii. 166, xxx. 323, xxxv. 323, xlv. 323, 312, 344.

"The views of man, nature, and society, which the truly philosophical poem contains, are the offspring of deep thought and extensive observation."—Alfred Cunningham's Essay on Crit. Hist. of Lit.

It was reviewed in Lon. Quar. Rev., xii. 104, by Charles Lamb.

"Not so correctly imagined by Mr. Gifford, the editor and celebrated Wordsworth not to read it."—Letter of C. Lamb.

See, also, Lon. Quar. Rev., xlix. 1: Annals Mag., vi. 273; No. 11, infra. 7. Poems: including Lyrical Ballads, and the Miscellaneous Pieces of the Author, with Additional Poems, a New Preface, and a Supplementary Essay, 1815, 2 vols. 8vo, 21 s. Reviewed in Lon. Quar. Rev., xiv. 201, (by W. Gifford,) and Lon. Mon. Rev., 1815, iii. 235. See, also, Southey's Life and Correspondence, ch. xx. 8. The White Doe of Rylstone; or, The Fate of the Nortons: a Poem, 1816, 4to, 21 s.; with 25 Illustrations by B. Foster and H. N. Humphreys, (see 1852,) 1859, sm. 4to, 18s.; mor., 26s. See Lon. Athen., 1852, ii. 787, 828.

"This, we think, has the merit of being the very worst we ever saw imprinted in a quarto volume. . . . In the Lyrical Ballads he was exhibited, on the whole, in a state of very great delirium; but in the poem before us he appears in a state of low and maniacal imbecility which would not have done credit to Master Mace himself, in the close of a violent day."—Lon. Quarterly Rev., xiv. 333: repub. in his Contrib. to Edin. Rev., 1862, 4s.

See, also, Cockburn's Life of Lord Jeffrey, vol. i. 4th reviewed in Lon. Quar. Rev., xiv. 218. (By W. Gifford. Blackw. Mag., iii. 366, and Lon. Mon. Rev., 1814, ii. 233.)

9. Thanksgiving Ode, Jan. 12, 1816, 1816, 8vo. 2d Letter to a Friend of Robert Burns (Mr. Gray) on an intended republication of Dr. Currie's Life and Poems of Burns, 1816, 8vo. Commenced by Hamilton in Vol. VII. of his Lectures on the English Poets, and by a friend of Robert Burns in Blackw. Mag., i. 361. The poem was answered in a Vindication of Mr. Wordsworth's Letter to Mr. Gray, &c., in Blackw. Mag., "Peter Bell: a Tale in Verse, 1819, 8vo, pp. was written in 1798. Reviewed favourably by Mag., v. 136, (see, also, xlii. 343,) and Annals. Lon. Mon. Rev., 1819, ii. 416, and Lon. Lit. Gaz. 273. See, also, Annals Mag., xiv. 304. It was—in Peter Bell, a Lyrical Ballad, 1819, 8vo, and Acers, a Lyrical Ballad, 1819, 8vo, pp. 26: Mon. Rev., 1819, ii. 422, and 1836, i. 32.

"If [Lord Byron] now and then grins at Mr. Coleridge; but ungraciously, and he attacked them, he brought his whole soul to the work. The most elaborate of Mr. Wordsworth's poems (The Excursion) he could find nothing to say, but that it was "clumsy, heavy, and his aversion." Peter Bell excited his spleen to such a degree, that he apostrophized the shades of Pope and Dryden, and demanded of them whether it were possible that such trash should evade contempt."—Lord Macaulay: Edin. Rev., liii. 563: republ. in his Essays.

In thanking the author for Peter Bell, Charles Lamb queried, "Why did you not add the Waggoner?" (He had heard Wordsworth read it from the MS. in 1806.) Thus encouraged, he gave to the world (with a dedication to Lamb)—12. The Waggoner; a Poem; to which are added Sonnets, 1819, 8vo.

"Mr. Wordsworth appears determined to try how far he can trample on the degraded poetry of his country. 'Keep it down,' seems to be his prevailing principle; and well may he add, 'now it is down.'"—Lon. Mon. Rev., 1819, iii. 36.

"Nobody, we are sure, who might have seen it [The Waggoner] published anonymously, would have suspected it to be a production of the Great Poet of the Lakes."—Blackw. Mag., v. 321.

It elicited Benjamin the Waggoner, a Ryghte Merrie and Conceited Tale in Verse: a Fragment, 1819, 8vo.

"We must observe that the parody, although it is entitled 'Benjamin the Waggoner,' is all about Peter Bell."—Lon. Mon. Rev., 1819, iii. 41, (q. v.)

13. The River Duddon, a Series of Sonnets; Vaudracour and Julia; and other Poems: to which is annexed a Topographical Description of the Country of the Lakes in the North of England, 1820, 8vo, pp. 321. The Topographical Description originally appeared as an Introduction to WILKINSON, REV. JOSEPH, No. 1. Favourably reviewed by Blackw. Mag., vii. 206, Lon. Gent. Mag., 1820, ii. 344, and *Lon. "Why choosing the site of a new church on a fine morning should naturally lead an author to write a hundred sonnets on events, &c. of church history from the days of the Druids to the date of 1822, is a consequence which we do not very clearly apprehend. . . . The chaff is out of all proportion to the grains."—Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1822, 191, 192.

"When the whole series—all its three parts—is perused, the effect is magnificent, and great events and deeds and minds seem to have been passing processionally before us, over the floor of an enchanted stage. . . . Can we do better than quote a good many of these noble sonnets?"—Blackw. Mag., xii. 177.

"His Ecclesiastical Sonnets are the finest illustrations of Christianity."—Blackw. Mag., xxxvii. 684. But see xiv. 927.

last time I saw Mr. Wordsworth," remarks one of his "he was in deep domestic sorrow, and beginning to der the intimacies of old age. 'Whatever,' he said, 'old may think of me or of my poetry is now of little care; but one thing is a comfort of my old age, that my works, written since the days of my early youth, a line I should wish to blot out because it panders to passions of our nature. This,' said he, 'is a comfort I can do no mischief by my works when I am gone.'" rring to Keble, we pause long enough to record t that Keble College, Oxford University, was June 23, 1870, Rev. Dr. E. B. Pusey, and Ga- Hardy, M.P. for Oxford, officiating in the inaugu- monies.

Wordsworth is the poet of nature and man,—not of humble some have said, but of noble emotions, lofty feelings, ever tends to exalt man and elevate him on the table- honour, morality, and religion. "His 'Cumberland Beggar,' 'Tintern Abbey,' and 'Lines on the Naming of Places,' unpromising as the subjects might ap- pear at first sight, with many other of his profound and curious speculations, have taught us new sympathies, the existence of which in human nature had scarcely been intimated by any poet before him. In these, his most successful efforts, he has attired, in diction of the most transcendent beauty, thoughts the most recondite, and imaginations the most subtle."—JAMES MOSYMEYER: Lect. on Gen. Lit., Poetry, &c., Lect. IV.

"We do not want Mr. Wordsworth to write like Pope or Prior, nor to dedicate his muse to subjects which he does not himself think interesting. We are prepared, on the contrary, to listen with a far deeper delight to the songs of his mountain solitude, and to gaze on his mellow pictures of simple happiness and affection, and his lofty sketches of human worth and energy; and we only beg that we may have those noble elements of his poetry, without the debasement of childish language, mean incidents, and incongruous images."—LORD JEFFREY: Edin. Rev., xix. (Feb. 1812) 375. See, also, Blackw. Mag., xx. 647 and xxiv. 694.

In republishing his Contributions to the Edinburgh Review, in 1843, Lord Jeffrey remarks,

"I have spoken in many places rather too bitterly and confidently of the faults of Mr. Wordsworth's poetry, and, forgetting that, even in my own view of them, they were but faults of taste or venial self-partiality, have sometimes visited them, I fear, with an asperity which should be reserved for objects of moral reprobation. . . . I still retain, in substance, the opinions which I should now like to have seen more gently expressed. . . . I finally resolved, therefore, to reprint my review of 'The Excursion.' . . . I have also reprinted a short paper on the same author's 'White Doe of Rylstone.'"—Note to reprint of review of The Excursion. See conclusion of our article.

"A holy calm is shed over his writings, whose general purpose seems to be to reconcile man with himself and his destiny, by furnishing him with a key to the mysteries of his present condition. Wordsworth's soul is instinct with such a pure love of nature, so much simplicity, or, as the French call it, loyalty, of purpose, that, had he not entangled himself in an unlucky theory, he might have shared the popularity of Cowper, whom he must be permitted to surpass in the general elevation, as well as the benevolence, of his sentiments. As it is, there are few who read, and fewer still who relish, him."—WILLIAM H. PARSCOTT, the historian: N. Amer. Rev., xxxv. (July, 1852) 174.

Immortal life through him."—WHITTIER.

"In the Lyrical Ballads and The Excursion Mr. Wordsworth appeared as the high-priest of a worship of which Nature was the idol. No poems have ever indicated so exquisitely a percep- tion of the beauty of the outer world, or so passionate a love and reverence for that beauty. Yet they were not popular, and it is not likely that they ever will be popular as the works of Sir Walter Scott are popular. The feeling which pervaded them was too deep for general sympathy. Their style was often too mysterious for general comprehension. They made a few esoteric disciples and many scoffers. Lord Byron founded what may be called an esoteric Lake school of poetry, and all the readers of poetry in England—we might say in Europe—has- tened to sit at his feet. What Mr. Wordsworth had said like a recluse, Lord Byron said like a man of the world,—with less profound feeling, but with more perspicuity, energy, and conciseness. We would refer our readers to the last two cantos of Childe Harold and to Manfred, in proof of these observations. Lord Byron, like Mr. Wordsworth, had nothing dramatic in his genius. . . . In spite of the reverence which we feel for the genius of Mr. Wordsworth, we cannot but think that the mi- nuteness of his descriptions often diminishes their effect. He has accustomed himself to gaze on nature with the eye of a lover,—to dwell on every feature, and to mark every change of aspect. Those beauties which strike the most negligent ob- server, and those which only a close attention discovers, are equally familiar to him, and are equally prominent in his poetry."—LORD MACAULAY: Edin. Rev., lxx. June, 1831) 565, 568: Macaulay's Life of Lord Byron, republ. in Macaulay's Essays.

"Little attended to as works of that stamp generally are in the outset, they gradually, but unceasingly, rose in public esti- mation; they took a lasting hold of the highly-educated youth of the next generation; and he now numbers among his devout worshippers many of the ablest men, profound thinkers, and most accomplished and discriminating women, of the age. In- deed, great numbers of persons whose mental powers, cultivated taste, and extensive acquisitions entitle their opinion to the very highest consideration, yield him an admiration approaching to idolatry, and assign him a place second only to Milton in English poetry. He is regarded by them in much the same light that Goethe is by the admiring and impassioned multitude of the Fatherland."—SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON: Hist. of Europe, 1818-1852, i. ch. v. See, also, his Essays, 1850, ii. 425.

"The works of genius of our age breathe a spirit of universal sympathy. The great poet of our times, Wordsworth,—one of the few who are to live,—has gone to common life, to the feel- ings of our universal nature, to the obscure and neglected por- tions of society, for beautiful and touching themes. Nor ought it to be said that he has shed over these the charms of his genius, as if in themselves they had nothing grand or lovely. Genius is not a creator, in the sense of fancying or feigning what does not exist. Its distinction is to discern more of truth than common minds. It sees under disguises and humble forms everlasting beauty. This it is the prerogative of Wordsworth to discern and reveal in the ordinary walks of life, in the common human heart. He has revealed the loveliness of the primitive feelings, of the universal affections, of the human soul. The grand truth which pervades his poetry is that the beautiful is not confined to the rare, the new, the distant,—to scenery and modes of life open only to the few,—but that it is poured forth profusely on the common earth and sky, that it gleams from the lowliest flower, that it lights up the humblest sphere, that the sweetest affections lodge in lowly hearts, that there is sacredness, dignity, and loveliness in lives which few eyes rest on,—that, even in the absence of all intellectual culture, the domestic relations can quietly nourish that disinterestedness which is the element of all greatness, and without which intellectual power is a splendid deformity. Wordsworth is the poet of humanity; he teaches reverence for our universal nature; he breaks down the taciturn barriers between human hearts.

"The same is true in an inferior degree of Scott, whose tastes, however, were more aristocratic. Scott had a childish love of rank, titles, show, pageants, and, in general, looked with keener eye on the outward life than into the soul. Still, he had a human heart, and sympathized with his race. With few exceptions, he was just to all his human brethren. A reconciling spirit breathes through his writings. He seizes on the interesting and beautiful features in all conditions of life, gives us bursts of tender and noble feelings even from rude natures, and continually knits some new tie between the reader and the vast varieties of human nature which start up under his teeming pen. He delighted, indeed, in Highland chiefs, in border thieves and murderers, in fierce men and fierce encounters. But he had an eye to catch the stream of sweet affections as it wound its way through humble life. What light has Jeanie Deans shed on the path of the obscure! He was too wanting in the religious sentiment to comprehend the solemn bearing, the stern grandeur, of the Puritans. But we must not charge with narrowness a writer who embodied in a Jewish maiden his highest conceptions of female nobleness.

"Another writer illustrating the liberalizing, all-harmonizing tendency of our times is Dickens, whose genius has sought and found subjects of thrilling interest in the passions, sufferings, virtues, of the mass of the people. He shows that life in its rudest forms may wear a tragic grandeur; that amidst follies and sensual excesses, provoking laughter or scorn, the moral feelings do not wholly die; and that the haunts of the blackest crimes are sometimes lighted up by the presence and influence of the noblest souls. He has, indeed, greatly erred in turning so often the degradation of humanity into matter of sport; but the tendency of his dark pictures is to awaken sympathy with our race, to change the unfeeling indifference which has prevailed towards the depressed multitude into sorrowful and indignant sensibility to their wrongs and woes."—WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING, D.D.: Address before the Mercantile Library Company of Philadelphia, May 11, 1841: Complete Works, Lond., 1870, p. 8vo, 123.

"Wordsworth was about five feet ten inches in height. His figure was not graceful, but in his countenance there was a fine mixture of the poet and philosopher. He resembled the portraits of Locke; his eyes burned with an inward glare, and looked as if they saw things (which they did) in nature not revealed to ordinary vision. His manners were grave and rather austere; but never, even when his poetical fortunes were at their lowest ebb, was he, in the smallest degree, a soured or disappointed man; for nature had given him a sanguine temperament, equable, indeed elastic, spirits; and he had moreover an unshaken faith in the genuineness of his own genius, and a correct appreciation of the value of his own writings, which he was sure would be finally rated at their proper worth, whatever vicissitudes they might meanwhile undergo. These vicissitudes are well summed up by De Quincey, who says, 'From 1800 to 1820 the poetry of Wordsworth was trodden under foot, from 1820 to 1830 it was militant, from 1830 and onwards it has been triumphant.' It must be remembered, however, that he had from the first a select fraternity of admirers who looked up to him as the very high-priest of nature.

"With regard to the poems themselves of Wordsworth there is but room for this single remark, that of these poems it may perhaps be said, with greater truth than of any other modern poetry, that they contain passages and lines so startling in their simplicity, subtlety, and freshness that the personal of them forms an epoch in the intellectual life of every student of sensibility and taste. When first read they are felt to be unlike any thing in poetry which the reader has ever met with before. As an instance of this spell-like originality, take the two last lines of the following stanza—

"The stars of midnight shall be dear
To her; and she shall lean her ear
In many a secret place
Where fountains dance their wayward round,
And beauty's form of murmuring sound Shall pass into her face."

JOHN FRANCIS WALLER, LL.D.: Imp. Dict. of Unfr. Biog., vi. (1856: 1859).

"Wordsworth est plus d'originalité dans le caractère que dans le génie, et peut-être est-il plus grand comme homme que comme poète. On ne peut donner trop d'éloges à la haute et pure moralité de ses œuvres; mais on ne saurait approuver sans réserve ni le genre qu'il choisit ni la manière dont il le traite. Il y a trop de prose dans sa poésie, c'est-à-dire trop d'éléments que l'imagination et les agéments de la versification ne peuvent vivifier et embellir. Ce défaut, qui ne sent pas moins dans ses courtes poésies lyriques, n'est que trop visible dans ses pièces de longue haleine, où les passages exquis sont coupés par des espaces arides, ternes, qui fatiguent et rebutent. Aussi Wordsworth n'a-t-il jamais obtenu ni le plein assentiment des esprits difficiles ni l'admiration du grand nombre; lui le poète de la vie commune, il n'a pas été populaire. Il a eu cependant une influence réelle. L'école des lacs, ou laker, dont il était le chef et à laquelle on rattache Coleridge, Southey et quelques autres, a laissé son empreinte sur la poésie anglaise contemporaine. A l'étranger, en France, en Allemagne, elle n'a pas été tout-à-fait éclipée, même par l'éclat supérieur de la poésie de Byron. Ce genre (la poésie de la vie humble et moyenne) a traité sur un terrain les plus distingués. M. Sainte-Beuve, qui y a consacré pour montrer ce qu'il aurait pu faire, s'il n'avait trouvé dans la critique un plus facile et plus brillant emploi de ses talents. Sur ce genre poétique, sur Wordsworth lui-même, ce sont trop peut-être que de vouloir dès à présent porter un jugement définitif. La postérité fera son choix plus ou moins éclairé par les nombreuses productions du grand solitaire de Rydal Mount, et ce qu'elle conservera de lui suffira pour honorer la mémoire de ce poète, d'une intelligence si pure et d'un si noble caractère."—*Nouv. "August 17th, 1837.—I breakfasted with Rogers this morning. Emerson went with me. Wordsworth came. A very interesting chat with him about his poetry. He repeated a few lines of his poetry, and I observed that he had said to me before, that he expected or desired from posterity any other name than 'Wordsworth' would be given him for the way in which his poems, in his essentially human character and relation, parent, husband,—the qualities which are common to all as opposed to those which distinguish one man from another.

ets are not, therefore, the works that he esteems the upon and I had spoken of the Sonnets as our favourite. "You are both wrong," Rogers, however, at the form of the Sonnet with exaggeration, that he less offensive. I regret my inability to record more worth's conversation. Emerson related that Jeffrey told him that so many people had thought highly of rth, that he was resolved to republish his poems, and had any thing to retract. Emerson, I believe, did not recollect; he had before said to me that Jeffrey, having found nothing to retract, except, perhaps, a contemptuous phrase or two. Emerson says he believed distaste for Wordsworth to be honest,—mere uncongeniality. Talfourd, who is now going to pay Jeffrey a s the same. worth and Dickens did not take to each other. Indeed, a mutual contempt between them, though they met. This was about 1843. Some days after, the gentleman told Wordsworth was in the suburbs of London, asked how he liked the great Novelist. Wordsworth had a tempt for young men, and, after pursuing up his lips in peculiar to him, and swinging one leg over the other, each of his ankles appearing over his socks, slowly, "Why, I am not much given to turn critic on people at, as you ask me, I will candidly avow that I thought y talkative, vulgar young person—but I dare say he very clever. Worldidge, Thomas, an English portrait-painter, b. 1700, d. 1766. Select Collection of Drawings from Curious Antique Gems, most of them in the Possession of the Nobility and Gentry of this Kingdom, etched after the Manner of Rembrandt, Lon., 1768, 2 vols. 4to; 1. p. r. 4to. Although this bears the date of 1768, it was really printed after 1780, having been ante-dated that it might appear under the date at which the plates were originally issued, though then without letter-press. A copy of the true edition of the plates of 1768, (in which the impressions are better than in the later copies,) printed on satin, Edwards, in 1796, £50; and a similar one, Prince de Galitzin, 600 francs. Other copies of the true edition of 1768 (it was printed in r. 8vo, 8vo, and 12mo, and bound in 1 vol., also in 2 vols., and 3 vols.) Pickering, in 1 vol., £10 10s.; Williams, 2610, in 3 vols., £10 15s.; Willett, 2610, in 3 vols. 12mo, £10 15s. There are copies of this original edition which have a letter-press added evidently of an earlier date than what was printed in 1784. Of the edition first named above (falsely dated 1768) some have proof plates (there should be 182, including portrait of Worldidge and head of Medusa, and some have also a Hercules) on thick French paper. Of the earlier copies also there are some on thick paper. In some copies the letter-press is in English; in some it is in French. Reprinted, 1823, 4to; 1. p., imp. 4to. "The poetry of Wotton, though chiefly written for the amusement of his leisure, and through the excitement of casual circumstances, possesses the invaluable attractions of energy, simplicity, and the most touching morality; it comes warm from the heart, and, whether employed on an amatory or didactic subject, makes its appropriate impression with an air of sincerity which never fails to delight. Of this description are the pieces entitled 'A Farewell to the Vanities of the World,' the 'Character of a Happy Life,' and the Lines on the Queen of Bohemia. One of his earliest pieces, being 'written in his youth,' was printed in Davison's 'Poetical Rhapsody,' 1602."—DR. DRAKE: Not op. and his Times, l. 672.

Wotton, William, D.D., b. at Wrentham, August 13, 1666, already referred to under W. HENRY, (supra), is perhaps the most remarkable authenticated cases of intellectual precocity. Within years of age, he translated chapters and psalm Hebrew, Greek, and Latin into English: in his year he was admitted of Catherine Hall, Cam and Dr. John Eachard, Master of the College, & that "Gulielmus Wottonus, infra decem annos, in mundo nec Grotio secundus," (April 1, 1676:) at years of age his skill in Hebrew, Arabic, Syriac, Greek, and Latin, arts and sciences, geography, philosophy, mathematics, and chronology, was such in an elegant copy of verses (In Gulielmum Wotstendi ingenii et incomparabilis spei puerum: duodecim annorum) by the learned Dr. James Master of Magdalene College and Dean of E rough: when twelve years and five months old: 1679,) then being acquainted with twelve languages was made Bachelor of Arts,—a case unparalleled or since, (see copies of the contemporaneous and to his learning in Nichols's *Lit. "The cause of antiquity, so rudely rault and Fontenelle, found support in has defeated it in one of his essays: dence or knowledge of the various his rights of the poet. It was, in fact, such a credulous and view as might have been taken by a pedant of a century. For it is in science taking the word as much as in works of genius, that he denies the new-born supposition. Temple's essay, however, was not French, and he was supposed by many to have lent vindication of injured authority. But it was in the most solid book that was written in any of this famous dispute.

Wotton published in 1601 his Reflections on Ancient Learning. He left in MS. translations of poems and prose pieces from the Russian. See Lon. Gent. Mag., 1849, ii. 211, (Obituary.)

Wright, Thomas, one of the most eminent of modern antiquaries, b. April 21, 1810, in the vicinity of Ludlow, a town on the borders of Shropshire and Herefordshire, received his early education at the Grammar-School of King Edward VI. in that town, and afterwards studied at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of B.A. in 1834 and of M.A. in 1837. Whilst yet an under-graduate, he was a zealous explorer of the valuable historical MSS. preserved in the libraries of the University, and from time to time communicated the results of his investigations to the pages of The Foreign Quarterly Review, The Gentleman's Magazine, Fraser's Magazine, The Literary Gazette, &c. These articles contributed largely towards laying the foundation of the more recent popularity of antiquarian studies, and of the more correct principles on which they have been pursued. Adopting the profession of a man of letters, in 1835 Mr. Wright removed to London, where—with the exception of the time devoted to tours of observation and superintendence of archaeological explorations—he has ever since resided. Shortly after his arrival in London he was introduced to Monsieur Guizot, who appointed him a corresponding member of the Committee charged by the French Government with the publication of documents connected with the History of France; and in 1842 (on the death of the Earl of Munster) he was elected a corresponding member of the Institute of France, (Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres) when it was stated that he was the youngest person who had received that honour. He was one of the founders of The Camden Society in 1838, and of the Percy Society (of which he was for some time treasurer and secretary) and Shakespeare Society in 1840; and in 1843, in conjunction with Charles Roach Smith, (supra), he founded The British Archaeological Association,—the Journal and other publications of which he edited until 1850, when he withdrew. He is a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, to whose Archæologia he has been a frequent contributor, and a member of many learned societies at home and abroad. In 1853-54 he edited a new series of The Retrospective Review, (Series I., 1820-26, 14 vols. 8vo, Series II., 1827-28, 2 vols. 8vo,) which only reached two volumes. He has contributed papers to Edin. Rev., New Month. Mag., Ainsworth's Mag., Macmillan's Mag., Athenæum, Art Journal, and Intellectual Observer, in addition to the periodicals already cited. Nor should we omit to state that the annual Archæological Congresses held at different places in England were originated at Canterbury in 1844 by his exertions.

Univ. Lib.) and 1867. (Griffin.) To this add No. 68.

"The text here given of the Canterbury Tales is mainly founded upon the Harl. MS. [No. 7334] selected by Mr. Wright, whose edition of the Tales must always be referred to as the standard by which alone the text can be determined with safety; and it is only a just tribute to the merits of that accomplished scholar to add that he is not more distinguished by his valuable and extensive labours than by the liberality with which he communicates his knowledge: a liberality which has placed the editor and the readers of this edition under many obligations.
. . . It is needless to say how highly I estimate the assistance
I have received throughout from the last, and incomparably the ablest, editor of Chaucer."—ROBERT BELL: Introel. and Pref. to his ed. of The Poetical Works of Chaucer, Parker, 1851-56, 8 vols.
sp. 8vo.

See, also, Lon. Athen., 1851, 291. To this edition—indeed, to all editions—must be added a Complete Verbal and Glossarial Index to Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, Based on the Harleian MS. No. 7334, as edited by Thomas Wright for the Percy Society, &c., by Hiram Corson,
A.M., editor of "Chaucer's Legend of Goode Women," &c., Phila., 8vo, in prep., 1866. Professor Corson's edition of the Legend of Goode Women was warmly commended. Mr. Richard Morris, editor of Hampole's Pricke of Conscience, Sir Gawayn, Alliterative Poems,
&c., has now in preparation an edition of Chaucer's Poetical Works, (for Bell & Daldy's Aldine Poets,) founded upon the Harleian MS. No. 7334, with References to other MSS., (the published Selections from the Canterbury Tales, Macmillan, 1867, 12mo. Prologue, Knights Tales, and Nonnes Preste's Tale, Macmillan, 1869, 2 vols. 12mo.) and Professor Francis J. Child, of Harvard, is also engaged upon a new edition of "The Morning Star of English Song." See, also, The Canter-

"Loitering purples droop and dream,

Languid haze-glimmer;

Tortured by the sultry beam,

Breezes swoon and meekly slumber."

... But the poet's wings are sometimes plumed in flight, thus:

"Let the eye range. Behold, the Deep

Slowly retires her matronous head,

While all along her million beads

The soul of Chaos lies asleep."

"This is fine; but what does it mean?"

Here is a critic, indeed! May not the poet

"The gods are powerless against stupidity."

1520; officiated for his father as ewerer at the coronation of Anne Boleyn, July, 1533, and subsequently fell into temporary disgrace with the king on her account; nominated High Sheriff for Kent, 1537, and in the same year was sent minister to Spain; charged by Bonner with treasonable correspondence with Cardinal Pole, and placed under arrest in 1540 or 1541, but soon acquitted and restored to high favour with Henry VIII.: d. at Sherborne, Oct. 11, 1542. To the editions of the poem of Surrey, Wyatt, and others, noticed on p. 899, supra, (HOWARD, HENRY, EARL OF SURREY,) we can now add The Poems of the Earl of Surrey and Sir Thomas Wyatt, with Memoirs by Rev. R. The Earl of Surrey, who survived his friend Wyatt, bewailed him in verses which have been greatly admired: two of these we quote:

"A visage stern and myld; where both did grow
Use to contemne, in vertue to relieue;
Amid great stormes, whom grace assured so,
To liue upright, and smile at Fortune's choyce.

"A hand that taught what might be said in ryme,
That left Chaucer the glory of his wit;
A mark the which (unparit for time)
Some may approche, but neuer none shall hit."

"Henry, Earl of Surrey, and Sir Thomas Wyatt, between whom I finde very little difference, I repute them (as before) for the two chief lanternes of light to all others that haue since employed their penne vpon English Poetrie; their conceits were lofty, their stiles stately, their conuoyance cleanly, their termes proper, their metre sweete and well proportioned."—PUTTENHAM: The Arte of English Poetrie, 1589, 4to.

"Had your (P. Henry's) praise been limn'd with pen
Of princely SURREY, once a poet sweet,

They on this theme discourers had been meet."

R. FLETCHER: Nine English Worthies, 1606, 4to, 51.

"Wyatt had a deeper and more accurate penetration into the characters of men than Surrey had: hence arises the difference in their satires. Surrey, in his satire against the citizens of London, deals only in reproach; Wyatt, in his, abounds with irony, and those nice touches of ridicule which make us ashamed of our faults, and therefore often silently effect amendment. Surrey's observation of nature was minute; but he directed it towards the works of nature in general, and the movements of the passions, rather than to the failings and characters of men; hence it is that he excels in the description of rural objects, and is always tender and pathetic. In Wyatt's Complaint we hear a strain of manly grief which commands attention, and we listen to it with respect for the sake of him that suffers. Surrey's distress is painted in such natural terms that we make it our own, and recognize in his sorrows emotions which we are conscious of having felt ourselves.

"In point of taste and perception of propriety in composition, Surrey is more accurate and just than Wyatt: he therefore seldom either offends with conceits or wearies with repetition, and when he imitates other poets he is original as well as pleasing. In his numerous translations from Petrarch he is seldom inferior to his master, and he seldom improves upon him. Wyatt is almost always below the Italian, and frequently degrades a good thought by expressing it so that it is hardly recognizable. Had Wyatt attempted a translation of Virgil, as Surrey did, he would have exposed himself to unavoidable failure."—DR. NOTT: ed. of Surrey and Wyatt, 1815-16, ii. 156.

See Lon. Mon. Rev., 1817, ii. 113, 402; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1831, ii. 302.

"The lighter poems of Wyatt are more unequal than those of Surrey; but his Ode to his Lady does not seem inferior to any production of his noble competitor. The sonnet in which he intimates his secret passion for Anne Boleyn, whom he describes under the allegory of a doe, bearing on her collar—is remarkable for more than the poetry, though that is pleasing. It may be doubtful whether Anne were yet queen; but in one of Wyatt's latest poems he seems to allude penitentially to his passion for her."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, i. 425, n.

"Noli me tangere: I Cesar's am,"

"We must agree with a critic above quoted that Wyatt co-operated with Surrey in having corrected the roughness of our poetic style. But Wyatt, although sufficiently distinguished from the common versifiers of his age, is confessedly inferior to Surrey in harmony of numbers, perspicuity of expression, and facility of phraseology. Nor is he equal to Surrey in elegance of sentiment, in nature and sensibility. His feelings are disguised by affectation and obscured by conceit. His declarations of passion are also embarrassed by wit and fancy; and his style is not intelligible, in proportion as it is careless and unadorned. His compliments, like the modes of behaviour of that age, are ceremonious and strained. He has too much art as a lover, and too little as a poet. His gallantries are laboured, and his versification negligent. The truth is, his genius was of the moral and didactic species; and his poems abound more in good sense, satire, and observations on life, than in pathos or imagination. Yet there is a degree of lyric sweetness in the following line, in which The Lover Complains of the Unkindness of his Love: Wyatt may justly be deemed the first English satirist. I am of opinion that he mistook his talents when, in compliance with the mode, he became a sonneteer; and, if we may judge from a few instances, that he was likely to have treated any other subject with more success than that of love. His abilities were seduced and misapplied by fabricating fine speeches to an unscrupulous mistress."—WATSON: Hist. of Eng. Poet., ed. 1858, i. 2, 49, (q. v.)

"Wyatt's love-poems are certainly concerted and unadorned, but these faults belong to the models on which he formed his style, and were the faults of the time in which he lived. Surrey alone felt for himself, and expressed his feelings with natural delicacy."—DR. BLISS: Athen. Oxon., i. 128, (q. v.)

Wycherley, William, son of Daniel Wycherley, of Cleave, Shropshire, and Bethia Shrimpton, of St. Andrew's, Holborn, (who were married Feb. 20, 1640,) was b. 1640, and in 1655 went to France, where he professed the Roman Catholic religion; on his return to England, became a member of Queen's College, Oxford, and, by Bishop Barlow's influence, abjured his new faith,—which, however, after a life not calculated to do credit to any church, he again embraced and adhered to (as Pope assures us) in his last moments. The chief points in his personal history are detailed in the authority from which we have just cited, and from which we shall make some apposite quotations,—premising that, after a short residence at Oxford, he was entered as a student of law in the Middle Temple, but soon became involved in the circle of fashionable dissipation in which he acquired so high an eminence.

"Wycherley was a very handsome man. His acquaintance with the famous Duchess of Cleveland commenced oddly enough. One day, as he passed that Duchess's coach in the ring, she leaned out of the window and cried out, loud enough to be heard distinctly by him, 'Sir, you're a rascal! you're a villain!' Wycherley from that instant entertained hopes. He did not fail waiting on her the next morning, and with very melancholy tone, begged to know how it was possible for him to have so much disoblige her Grace. They were very good friends from that time."—Pope's Anec., sect. i.

"Wycherley was in a bookseller's shop at Bath, or Tunbridge, when Lady Drogheda came in and happened to inquire for the Plain Dealer. A friend of Wycherley's, who stood by him, pushed him toward her, and said, 'There's the Plain Dealer, Madam, if you want him.' Wycherley made his excuses, and Lady Drogheda said that 'she loved plain dealing best.' He afterwards visited that lady, and in some time after married her. This proved a great blow to his fortunes: just before the time of his courtship he was designed for governor to the late Duke of Richmond, and was to have been allowed fifteen hundred pounds a year from the government. His absence from court in the progress of this amour, and his being yet more absent after his marriage, (for Lady Drogheda was very jealous of him,) disgusted his friends there so much that he lost all his interest with them. His lady died, and his misfortunes were such that he was thrown into the Fleet, and lay there seven years. It was then that Colonel Brett got his Plain Dealer to be acted, and contrived to get the King (James the Second) to be there. The colonel attended him thither. The king was mightily pleased with the play,—asked who was the author of it; and, upon hearing that it was one of Wycherley's, complained that he had not seen him for so many years, and inquired what was become of him. The colonel improved this opportunity so well that the king gave orders his debts should be discharged out of the privy purse. Wycherley was so weak as to give an account only of five hundred pounds, and so was confined almost half a year, till his father was at last prevailed on to pay the rest,—between two and three hundred pounds more."—JOHN DEWIS: Spence's Anec., sect. i.

He again became embarrassed by debt; and as his father's estate, to which he succeeded, was entailed, and the income attached by the son's creditors, he saw no mode of relief at a period of life when cares of this kind are not easily borne. In his 80th year he was married to a young woman with a fortune of £1500, which was soon reduced by the husband, who died Jan. 1, 1715, eleven days after his nuptials. As an author, he is chiefly known by four comedies, first acted respectively in the years in which they were published, viz.: 1. Love in a Wood; or, St. James' Park, Lon., 1672, 4to; 1694, 4to. 2. The Gentleman Dancing-Master, 1673, 4to; 1693, 4to. 3. The Country Wife, 1675, 4to; 1683, 4to; 1695, 4to; 1777, 12mo. 4. The Country Girl; altered from Wycherley by Garrick, 1790, 12mo. The Plain Dealer, 1677, 4to; 1686, 4to; 1694, 4to. The Plain Dealer, with Illustrations, (by Bickerstaff,) 1766, 8vo. Wycherley's Plays, (Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, supra.) 1712, 8vo; 1720, 2 vols. 12mo; 1731, 12mo; 1735, 12mo; 1768, 12mo; 1775, 12mo. Also in Dramatic Works of Wycherley, Congreve, Vanbrugh, and Farquhar, with Biographical and Critical Notices by Leigh Hunt, Lond., Moxon, 1840, r. 8vo; 1849, r. 8vo; 1855, r. 8vo; Routledge, Dec. 1863, r. 8vo.

"The chronology of Wycherley's plays I am well acquainted with, for he has told it me over and over. 'Love in a Wood' he wrote when he was but nineteen; 'The Gentleman Dancing-Master' at twenty-one; 'The Plain Dealer' at twenty-five; and 'The Country Wife' at one- or two-and-thirty."—Pope's Anecdotes, sect. iv.

"We are incredulous, we own, as to the truth of this story. Nothing that we know of Wycherley leads us to think him incapable of sacrificing truth to vanity. And his memory in the decline of his life played him such strange tricks that we might question the correctness of his assertion without throwing any imputation on his veracity. It is certain that none of his plays was acted till 1672, when he gave Love in a Wood to the public."

"When we look minutely at the pieces themselves, we find in every part of them reasons to suspect the accuracy of Wycherley's statement. . . . His fame as a writer rests wholly on his comedies, and chiefly on the last two. Even as a comic writer, he was neither of the best school nor highest in his school. He was, in truth, a worse Congreve. His chief merit, like Congreve's, lies in the style of his dialogue. But the wit which lights up The Plain Dealer and The Country Wife is pale and flickering when compared with the gorgeous blaze which dazzles almost to blindness in Love for Love and The Way of the World. . . . In truth, his mind, unless we are greatly mistaken, was naturally a very ingre soil, and was forced only by great labour and outlay to bear fruit, which, after all, was not of the highest flavour. He did scarcely more claim to originality than Terence. It is not too much to say that there is hardly any thing of the least value in his plays of which the hint is to be found elsewhere. . . . The only thing original about Wycherley, the only thing which he could furnish from his own mind in inexhaustible abundance, was prodigality. It is curious to observe how every thing that he touched, however pure and noble, took in an instant the colour of his own mind. . . . We pass a very severe censure on Wycherley when we say that it is a relief to turn from him to Congreve."—LORD MACAULAY: Comic Dramatists of the Restoration: Edin., Rev., Jan. 1841, and in his Essays.

"As long as Men are false and Women vain,
Whilst gold continues to be Virtue's Bane,
In pouted satire Wycherley shall reign."

"Wycherley was ambitious of the reputation of wit and libertinism; and he attained it: he was probably capable of reaching the fame of comic-comedy and instructive ridicule."—HUME: Hist. of Eng., ch. lxxi.

"Wyche was before Congreve; and his 'Country Wife' will last longer than any thing of Congreve's as a popular acting play. It is only a pity that it is not entirely his own; but it is enough so to do him never-decreasing honour, for the best things are his own. His humour is, in general, broader, his characters more natural, and his incidents more striking, than Congreve's. It may be said of Congreve, that the workmanship overlays the materials; in Wycherley, the casting of the parts and the fable are alone sufficient to ensure success. We forget Congreve's characters, and only remember what they say; we remember Wycherley's characters and the incidents they meet with, just as if they were real, and forget what they say, comparatively speaking."—*HARRIS: Lect. on the Eng. 6. Posthumous Works, in Prose and Verse, published from his Original MSS. by Lewis Theobald; to which are prefixed Some Memoirs of Mr. Wycherley's Life, by Major Paek, 1728, 8vo.

"Wycherley was really angry with me for correcting his verses so much. I was extremely plagued up and down for almost two years with them. However, it went off pretty well at last; and it appears, by the edition of Wycherley's Posthumous Works, that he had followed the advice I so often gave him, and that he had gone so far as to make some hundreds of prose maxims out of his verses. Those verses that are published are a mixture of Wycherley's own original lines with a great many of mine inserted here and there, but not difficult to be distinguished, and some of Wycherley's, suffered a little in the running, probably by Theobald, who had the chief care of that edition."—Pope's Anecdotes, sect. iv.

(there are about twenty variations.) John De, b. "The Morning Star of the Reformation," b. according to the assertion of Leland, (Itinerary, v. 92, 1292) confirmed by Dr. Vaughan, (Lond. Athen., 1861, i. 29) "at Sprewel, a poor village, a good mile from Remont," Yorkshire, about 1324, and, according to his biographers, save Mr. Shirley, who is skeptical as regards this statement, educated at Queen's College anderton College, Oxford, in 1361, (before which time he is said to have warmly opposed the Monastic order) was made Warden or Master of Balliol Hall, and the same year was presented to the rectory of Fillingham or Fillingham, Yorkshire; was subsequently Rector of Ludgershall; in 1365 appears to have resigned the mastership of Balliol Hall for that of Canterbury Hall, was ejected in 1366; became Rector of Lutterworth, Leicestershire, 1374, and Prebendary of Worcester, &c. was arraigned for heresy, by a convocation of the clergy at St. Paul's, in 1377, and again, by order of Pope Gregory, at the same place, in 1378; and, at his property of Lutterworth, after an indefatigable warfare against the corruptions of faith and practice then prevalent Dec. 31, 1384.

About thirty years after his death, i. e. on May 3, 1429, the Council of Constance (the same assembly of 1429 which burned John Huss and Jerome of Prague) condemned forty-five articles maintained by Wycliffe as heretical, false, and erroneous, and ordered that his bones should be dug out of consecrated ground and cast on a dunghill. This disgraceful sentence—there was some manhood left in England—was not executed till 1428, when orders were sent by Pope Clement VIII to the Bishop of Lincoln to have it strictly carried out. Therefore, after a rest of forty-four years, his remains were exhumed and burnt; and the ashes were cast into the Swift, (a branch of the Avon,) which runs by the foot of the hill on which the town of Lutterworth is situated.

"Thus," exclaims the eloquent Fuller, "this brook receives his ashes into Avon; Avon into Severn; Severn into the wide sea; and thus into the wide ocean. And so the ashes of Wycliffe are the emblem of his doctrine, which is now deposited in the world over."—Fuller's Church History.

Thus beautifully rendered by Wordsworth:

"Wycliffe is disimhumed,
Yes, his dry bones to ashes are consumed,
And flung into the brook that travels near:
Forthwith that ancient voice which streams can hear Thus speaks—(that voice which walks upon the waves, Though seldom heard by busy human kind):
As from these ashes, little brook, wilt bear
Up to the Avon—Avon to the tide
Of Severn—Severn to the narrow sea—
Into an ocean they—this deed executed
An emblem yield to friends and enemies,
How the bold teacher's doctrine, sanctified
By truth, shall spread throughout the world depend."

"The grain of mustard-seed which was now sown, took a great root. The doctrine which Wycliffe propagated with a much zeal and ability could not again be suppressed; the seed of Antichrist was gradually shaken from its old home, and the impulse which he gave to religious inquiry was destined to reach the latest ages of futurity. His doctrinal opinions cannot be detailed in this brief and imperfect notice. It may, however, be remarked that he clearly anticipated the most distinguishing doctrines of the Protestants, and that his opinions on certain points present an obvious resemblance with those of Calvin. . . . The influence of Wycliffe's heresies extended from England to the Continent, and thence, again, with the subsequent progress of the Reformation, many of his views were traced. The next conspicuous stage was the Kingdom of Bohemia. The King of Bohemia's sister was the Countess of Richard the Second, and she came to England in the twelfth century. She was a religious princess, and constantly studied the Gospels in English, explained by the explications of the monks. The Bohemians who had frequented her court returned to their own country, and carried along with them some of the seeds of the great Reformer, which, being written in Latin, were accessible to the learned of all the European nations. Jerome of Prague, who had studied in the University of Oxford, and had translated many of his works into the Bohemian language, had, according to another and more probable account, copied some of them in England, and carried the transcripts to Bohemia. By this eminent person, and by his pupils John Huss, the writings and character of Wycliffe were held in the highest veneration; and they endeavoured to bring to him the

First edition of Wycliffe's translation, The New Translated out of the Latin Vulgat, by John Wiclif, S.T.D., about 1378, to which is Prefixt, &c., Lon., 1731, fol., 150 copies, we have already noticed, (LEWIS, JOHN, No. 4.) There was subsequently published The New Testament, Translated from the Latin, in the Year 1380, by John Wycliffe, D.D.: to which are prefixed Memoirs of the Life, Opinions, and Writings of Dr. Wycliffe, and an Historical Account of the Saxon and English Versions of the Scriptures previous to the Fifteenth Century: by the Rev. Henry Hervey Baber, M.A., 1810, 4to; 1. p., r. 4to, £1 11s. 6d. Wycliffe's New Testament was also published in Bagster's English Hexapla, 1841, 4to. There has since appeared Wycliffe's New Testa- ment: the First Translation into English, and now for the First Time Printed from a Contemporary MS. written about 1380, formerly in the Monastery of Sion, and late in the Collection of Lea Wilson, F.S.A., Pickering, printed in black letter by C. Whittingham, Chiswick Press, 1848, sm. 4to, on thick paper, £2 2s.; antique calf, £2 12s. 6d. On vellum, 2 or 3 copies: Maskell, May, 1854, £18 18s. This version is earlier than the one published by Lewis, and differs greatly from it. See, also, The Gothic and Anglo-Saxon Gospels in Parallel Columns, with the Versions of Wycliffe and Tyndale: Arranged, with Preface and Notes, by the Rev. Jos. "This book is a great boon to the students of English."—Lon. Reader, 1865, ii. 630.

"Of the merit attaching to their [the translators of "King James's"] version, a considerable share belongs to Tyndale. Parker's Bible was the professed basis, and that was a version of Cranmer's. Cranmer's Bible was chiefly a correction of Matthew's, or, in other words, of Tyndale's, so far as Tyndale had translated. Thus King James's translation resolves itself at last in no small measure into Tyndale's; and when we consider the adverse circumstances continually pressing upon that noble-minded man, with the little assistance he could obtain, the work which he produced assumes a pre-eminent position amid the immortal monuments of human learning and skill."—Bibl. Cyr., ii. 919.

A manuscript of Wycliffe's New Testament, with a version of the Lessons and Epistles, written about 1380, comprised in 2 vols. small 12mo, formerly in the possession of Sir Edward Dering, was sold from the library of Dean Conybeare, Dec. 1857, for £145. Selections from Wycliffe's New Testament will be found in Cruttwell's edition of Bishop Thomas Wilson's Bible, Bath, 1785, 3 vols. 4to.

But it is only within the last twenty years that the whole of Wycliffe's version was given to the world: The Holy Bible, containing the Old and New Testaments, with the Apocryphal Books, in the Earliest English Versions, made from the Latin Vulgate, by John Wycliffe and his Followers: Edited by the Rev. Josiah Forshall, F.R.S., and Sir Frederick Madden, K.H., F.R.S., Oxford University Press, 1850, 4 vols. r. 4to, £5 15s. 6d. The editors laboured more or less on this work for nearly twenty years. 170 MSS. were collected. Various readings, a glossary, historical preface, description of the MSS., &c., add greatly to the value of the volumes. At the sale of Archbishop Tenison's MSS., July 1, 1861, a portion of Wycliffe's translation of the Old Testament, written on vellum, was sold for £150.

June, 1781, in Duke Street, St. James's, Westminster, the son of a newspaper agent, succeeded to, and carried on until within a few years of his death, Sept. 6, 1836, the paternal profession: it enabled him to leave a fortune of £17,000. He died a bachelor. His collection of British fishes and the specimens illustrative of his papers in the Linnean Society were, at the sale of his effects, (Dec. 1836,) secured by the Trustees of the British Museum. He became a Fellow of the Linnean Society in 1825. From this date until his death eighty-one papers were communicated or read by him to scientific societies (Trans. Linn. Soc., Phil. Trans., Trans. Zoolog. Soc., &c.) or journals, (Zoolog. Jour., Annals and Mag. of Nat. Hist., &c.) and he contributed a chapter on Fishes to W. H. Harvey's Sea-Side Book. He was for a long time a Vice-President of the Zoological Society. For more detailed notices of his services to the literature of natural history, we refer to Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1836; Lon. Athen., 1836, 1143; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1836, ii. 312; Knight's Eng. Cyc., Aug., vi., 1838, 878; Zoological Biography of the Ray Society, (notices upwards of seventy of his papers.) But the most durable monuments to his fame are his two great works on Fishes and Birds, which will long be standard authorities with the naturalist.

"The learned editor . . . has made such extensive and important additions to it as to render it far more serviceable to scholars than the English edition. . . . The most striking original contribution of a special character which has been made to the work is an Essay on the Order of Words in Attic Greek Prose, by Prof. Charles Short. . . . We doubt much whether anything has recently appeared more creditable to the classical scholarship of this country. It represents not only a man of great grammatical and syntactical knowledge, but an extraordinary amount of special reading among the Attic prose writers. He can turn over its pages without being struck with so solid and elaborate character. Professor Short has by this position placed himself in the first rank of the Hellenists of the age. It is understood that he has, in addition to his general class to advance classical scholarship and criticism in this country, given long-continued attention to the illustration and expansion of Homer; and it is to be sincerely hoped, now that Hellenic studies are attracting notice, that he will be induced to publish the results of his researches and reflections."—Athen. Gaz., June 1, 1870, 78.

Professor Drisler, in his preface to this and Yonge's Lexicon, "calls the attention of scholars to Short's Essay, 'as the first attempt to collect in a single treatise the various points of this difficult and vast subject; not even among the Germans has it been full and so systematically been undertaken.' . . . all classical Greek Lexicons should be based on the Greek Lexicon of the Roman . . . "This work, consisting of two quarto volumes, I have lately perused, and I strongly recommend it to all who would, in a most agreeable manner, extend or refresh their acquaintance with the institutions, the literature, the manners, and the distinguished men of Greece, at the most interesting period of her history. To it Charles Yorke was the principal contributor before he had completed his twentieth year, and, considering the knowledge of books and men which his contributions exhibit, I own they seem to me a more wonderful instance of precocity than the early Latin verses of Cowley and Milton, which clever school-boys can so closely imitate."—LEON MANNING: Lives of the Lord Chancellors. To the works of Arthur Young the world is more indebted for the diffusion of agricultural knowledge than to any writer who has yet appeared. If great real, indefatigable exertions, and an unparing expense in making experiments can give a man a claim to the gratitude of agriculturists, Arthur Young deserves it more than most men. We will not assert that in all cases his conclusions were correct, or his judgment unimpeachable; but even his blunders, if he committed any, have tended to the benefit of agriculture, by exciting discussion and criticism."—Kilmer's Irish Farmer, vol. v. See Knight's Mag. Aug. vi. (1855) 891.

projected nothing new or original, nor devised any different mode of agriculture in any point; but he collected a huge mass of miscellaneous information, which had no small effect on the progress of agriculture."—Thomson's Agr. Rep., 1854, 56. The works of Arthur Young did incomparably more than any of any other individual to introduce a taste for agriculture to diffuse a knowledge of the art in this and other countries. They are written in an animated, forcible, pure English style, and are at once highly entertaining and instructive. . . . Though sometimes rash and prejudiced, his statements and inferences are in general to be depended upon. His activity, perseverance, and devotion to agriculture were unequalled. . . . His Tours, especially those in Ireland and in France, which are both excellent, are his most valuable publications."—McCulloch's Lit. of Scot. Prov., 1845, 214. See, also, Index.

The notice of Young in Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., xxi. (1800) 960, is a very paltry affair, unworthy of the book and the subject. In the first and second of the thirty-three lines (large type) which are devoted to this eminent man, he is styled "an agricultural writer of some note in his day." He was of great note to his own day, and will be illustrious in all succeeding days, so long as the "profit of the earth is for all," and "the king himself is served by the field." (Eccles. v. 9.)

Thomas, M.D. a man who will be remembered as one of the most illustrious philosophers of all ages and nations. (I venture this in 1870,) was born of parents belonging to the Friends, at Milverton, Somersetshire, June 13, 70 years of age could read fluently; before he had travelled twice through the Bible; and seven four and five, recited, "with the exception of two," the whole of Goldsmith's Deserter in 1787, at a little more than fourteen, being d in Greek, Latin, French, Italian, Hebrew, and Arabic, to which he soon added some known even other languages, was appointed classical tutor to Judson Gurney, of Youngsbury, and held this in 1792; when about eighteen, produced, in calligraphy, a Greek translation or paraphrase of a Farewell to Cromwell, from Shakspeare's (H.) which elicited the applause of Burke, who at the youth should be reared in such a way educate a Bacon or a Newton in the maturity and time;" at nineteen, under the auspices of his e, Dr. Brocklesby, (p. 249, supra.) commenced studies in London; and at twenty read before Society an essay on vision, which was published in the Philosophical Transactions for 1793; at e, declined the post of private secretary to the Richmond, and shortly afterwards removed first rgh and then to Göttingen, for the purpose of his professional education, at the last named devoting a portion of his time to drawing, riding, music, and horsemanship; on his return d was entered as a Fellow Commoner at Embsiege, Cambridge, where he was introduced by rd Farmer as "a pupil qualified to read lectures preceptors," and silenced the pompous Parr quotation of an opposing verdict of the great n 1797 inherited from Dr. Brocklesby his house, gallery of paintings, collection of prints, and 000; elected Professor of Natural Philosophy al Institution, 1801, and Foreign Secretary to Society, which office he held for life, 1802; to 1825 practised medicine at No. 48, Welbeck ndon, from 1804 to 1820 spending the terms uly and October at Worthing; in 1807 was an al candidate for the office of Physician to the Hospital, but in 1811 was elected to the same t. George's Hospital, and retained this post leath in Park Square, London, where he had ee 1826, in his 56th year, May 10, 1829.

he was one of the Commissioners on Weights ures, and in the same year was appointed to the Board of Longitude, with the charge of sion of the Nautical Almanac. After a period ars, the Board was suppressed; but the Admin- uted to employ the services of the officer who calculations for the almanac; and a new coun- ve members, Dr. Young, Captain Sabine, and ay, succeeded to the duties of the old Board. a of labour now devolved upon Young to which seriously impaired by the petty persecutions which assailed him, was unequal, and it was soon evident that the close of his industrious and useful career was at hand.

"Though thus under the pressure of severe illness," remarks his friend and biographer, "nothing could be more striking than the entire calmness and composure of his mind, or could surpass the kindness of his affections to all around him. He said that he had finished all the works on which he was engaged, with the exception of the rudiments of an Egyptian Dictionary, (No. 10, infra.) which he had brought near to its completion, and which he was extremely anxious to be able to finish. It was then in the hands of the lithographer; and he not only continued to give directions concerning it, but laboured at it with a pencil when, confined to his bed, he was unable to hold a pen. To a friend who expostulated with him on the danger of fatiguing himself, he replied, it was no fatigue, but a great amusement to him; that it was a work which, if he should live, it would be a satisfaction to him to have finished, but that if it were otherwise, which seemed most probable, as he had never witnessed a complaint which appeared to make more rapid progress, it would still be a great satisfaction to him never to have spent an idle day in his life. . . . In the very last stage of his complaint, in the last lengthened interview with the writer of the present memoir, his perfect self-possession was displayed in the most remarkable manner. After some information concerning his affairs, and some instructions concerning the hieroglyphical papers in his hands, he said that, perfectly aware of his situation, he had taken the sacraments of the Church on the day preceding; that, whether he should ever partially recover, or whether he were rapidly taken off, he could patiently and contentedly await the issue."—HUDSON GURNEY: Memoir of the Life of Thomas Young, M.D., F.R.S., Foreign Associate of the Royal Institute of France, &c. &c., with a Catalogue of his Works and Essays, Lon., 1831, r. 8vo, pp. 62.

This was prefixed to Young's Rudiments of an Egyptian Dictionary, &c., (No. 10, infra.) and a few copies for private distribution were thus taken off separately.

LIST OF DR. YOUNG'S WORKS.

1. De Corporis Humani Viribus conservatricibus Dissertatio, Göttingen, 1796. 8vo. This was his inaugural dissertation on taking his degree of M.D. at Göttingen. 2. Syllabus of a Course of Lectures on Nature and Experimental Philosophy, Lon., 1802. 8vo. 3. Reply to the Animadversions of the Edinburgh Reviewers, 1804. 8vo. Positions assumed by Young in his Bakerian Lecture on the Theory of Light and Colours, published in Phil. Trans. for 1802, in an Account of Some Cases of the Production of Colours not hitherto Described, published in Phil. Trans., 1802, and in his Bakerian Lecture: Experiments and Calculations relative to Physical Optics, published in Phil. Trans. for 1804, were attacked by a shallow critic, afterwards Lord Brougham, (whose errors in a memoir in Phil. Trans. for 1798 had been exposed by Young,) in the Edinburgh Review, Jan. 1803, 450, 457, and Oct. 1804, 97. Of Young's Reply, above noticed, just one copy was sold! In vain did the young philosopher strive to arouse the obtuse intellects of his countrymen to the importance of his great discovery of the Fundamental Law of Interference. A publisher, who had agreed to give £1000 for the copyright of his Lectures on Natural Philosophy, declined the purchase, and they were not published until 1807, (No. 4, infra.) See Lockhart's Life of Scott, ch. xiii.

"The Edinburgh Review, in its second number, undertook to crush at once the theory of Young and his reputation as a philosopher. . . . This attack, paltry as it was, seriously prejudiced the reception, or even the dispassionate consideration, of Young's views. His anxious vindication, put forth in a separate pamphlet, was unequal, and the doctrine of interference was first misunderstood and belished in France ten years later."—PROF. J. D. FORBES, D.C.L., Engng. Brit., 8th ed., t. I, 1854, 808. Philos. Dissert., p. 9, for an estimate of the respective merits of Young and Fresnel in the establishment of the Undulatory Theory; respecting which an eminent authority remarks,

"Such is the beautiful theory of Fresnel and Young; for we must not, in our regard for one great name, forget the justice which is due to the other; and to separate and assign to each his share would be as impracticable as invalid, so intimately are they blended together throughout every part of the system,—early, acute, and pregnant suggestion characterizing the one, and maturity of thought, fulness of systematic development, and decisive experimental illustration equally distinguishing the other."—SIR JOHN F. W. HERSCHELL. See Peacock's Life of Young, 397.

Young was satisfied with this verdict, and thought that "Fresnel, if he had lived, would have preferred his share of the treasure as much as he did his." See remarks of M. Arago, (infra.)

Young, James Hamilton, b. in Newton-upon-Ayr, Ayrshire, Scotland, 1793, emigrated with his parents to America, 1801, and has ever since resided in Philadelphia. About 1830 he was employed by Samuel Augustus Mitchell to compile and engrave the maps extensively circulated throughout the United States as Mitchell's Maps; and in 1839 he began to write the geographies and to engrave the maps attached to them, which are known as Mitchell's School Geographies, Old Series. These were all published by Thomas, Cowperthwait & Co., Philadelphia, by whose agency an annual circulation of 300,000 to 400,000 copies was secured. The New Series of Mitchell's School Geographies include First Lessons, New Primary, Intermediate, and New School Geography; also a Physical Geography, by John Brocklesby, A.M.,—all published, together with the Old Series, by E. "The admirers of Young will be glad to hear of an accessible edition of his Lectures, in which the text has been carefully preserved and all who seek information should know that Young is not only a popular writer, but by far the most popular of those whose accuracy can be relied on in a vast range of subjects, and who have actually written through that range."—Am. Ath. 1843, 189.

From 1817 (1818) he held the professorship of natural philosophy in the Royal Institution, and delivered a series of lectures which he published in 1827, and which to this day form the best existing compendium of the elementary principles of physics. Considering that this work is composed of popular lectures, from which the symbols and technical language of mathematics were disgustfully excluded, its precision, accuracy, and completeness are marvellous, and are combined with almost unparalleled brevity and clearness. It was far in advance of the time when it appeared; and indeed, the popular treatise of the present day still lag behind it after a lapse of sixty years. The original edition, in 2 vols. dv., is highly priced in account of the beauty and accuracy of the illustrations of the phenomena of light which it contains. But a new edition, in 2 vols. dv., has the advantage of containing accounts of the recent progress of science, edited by Professor Kelland. — *Proc W. J. M. Bazaar, Ed. J. Soc. Prof. of Nat. An Account of some Recent Discoveries in Hieroglyphical Literature and Egyptian Antiquities, including the Author's Original Alphabet, as extended by M. Champollion, with a Translation of Five Unpublished Greek and Egyptian Manuscripts, 1827, 8vo. This title page appropriately introduces a great question, the one by which Young's name is chiefly known—I fear that I might justly add, still known—to most students in Great Britain and America: the opposing claims of Champollion and Young to the discovery of the hieroglyphic alphabet,—in the estimation of Niebuhr and Hübner, the greatest event in the literary history of the age. The unjust charge preferred by Dr. Hauser in Ägyptens Stelle in der Weltgeschichte Hamburg, 1815, that “on the publication of Champollion's Alphabet, in 1822, Young made a vain attempt to appropriate the discovery to himself,” renders a brief statement of the facts, and the citation of more intelligent opinions, imperative.

Dr Young published in 1814 his conjectural translation of the Rosetta inscription; in 1815 discovered that there were symbolic signs in the carchorial character, in 1816 proved that the cursive characters of the sacred papers were derived from the hieroglyphics, in 1818 discovered the hieroglyphic alphabet, and in 1819 embodied the results of his laborious investigations in that famous article in Esprit des Enoye Brit. Supp. vol. 1 which was characterized by the Edinburgh Review as "the greatest effort of scholarship and ingenuity of which modern literature can boast."

 $\mathcal{N} \neq \emptyset$ for \mathcal{L} -homomorphisms.

"At the beginn. of my Egyptian researches," remarks Dr.

Young, "I had accidentally received a letter from W. Champlin, which accompanied a copy of his work on the Slave Baptist under the Pharoah, sent as a present to the Society, and so we received some preliminary information regarding the nature and purpose of the original investigation of America, and were imperfectly prepared in the evening to discuss it. I only answered his inquiries from a rudimentary to the original in-trust to the British Museum; and a short time afterward sent him a copy of my conjectural translation of the passage as it was inserted in the Archæologia."

He adds that, "with regard to the criminal imputation, M. Champollion appeared to me to have done at that time but little," and that the few references he made to it "seemed to depend entirely on Mr. Arctif's investigations," which he had tacitly adopted. See Temple Account, Ac. 1823, 40, 41.

"As M. Champollion has not ventured to contradict the statement of Dr. Young in regard to the commencement of the hieroglyphs, does he admit having seen the hieroglyphs before the Egyptians possibly two years before the capture of the Nile? I have (Paris, 1822, No. 1) which contains his first account of the hieroglyphs. It is evident that he was in the habit of Dr. Young's opinions at almost every stage of his progress and that the question of originality may be so easily decided that of priority of publication."—Edin. Rev., xiv (Dec 1822) 11.

I record the verdict of several Egyptologists. "The first idea," remarks a critic whose name I cannot mention, "is another creation, reminiscent for its rambling length and its use of certain hieroglyphics being intended to represent a snake." This was suggested by Dr. Young, who from the names of Ptah and Ankhnesneferibre pointed out signs which have since proved to be correct. Working upon this basis, Professor Champollion, with happy success, made out four or five others, so that twenty thirty symbols, and by the ingenuity and application of two or three others, he was able to turn to good use the Egyptian text in deciphering the great cylinder of the names of the Pharaohs and of the famous Egyptian emperors, together with their titles which, translated, gives us the means of determining the dates of most of the temples built within the period of their rule. It cannot seem to be surprising to allow this, but the fact is verified and firmly by has accomplished the work he stood in need of making to himself the word of another."—UNION S. A. AND THE HAZAR No. 2.

To the same effect the Chevalier de Parrey, a country man of Champollion, observes,

"Dr. Young was the first who showed that the hereditary characters have, in many cases, an alphabetic order, and he furnished Mr. Champollion with a key, without which he never could have arrived at the important and curious results which he has since obtained."

and he considers that to dispute the priority of Tang's discovery would be as absurd as to say that the inventor of gunpowder was not he who mixed sulfur, saltpeter and charcoal, but the one who first applied the mixture to the invention of projectiles.

The following testimony, from a very eminent authority is, on every account, of great value:

"Depuis dix ans en partie avec enthousiasme de la direction de l'Alphabet phonétique faite par son fils Champollion, qui par ce système parvenait à lire les hiéroglyphes bien écrits, et c'est qu'il en résultait, non des difficultés mais une grande facilité. Le baron Turgot, un Anglais, qui s'élevait contre le grand nombre de cette découverte. Ce fut en 1810 que je revis à Valence un alphabetique du plus grand des égyptologues, lequel comprenait les noms de Ptolémée et de Sévère, pour lesquels il a bien exactement déterminé les sons et ceux qui correspondent avec les résultats obtenus par M. Champollion. Après un examen pareil, on peut dire librement maintenant qu'il n'y avait rien de nouveau dans ce système, quoiqu'il soit très utile; mais les hiéroglyphes, quoique le baron de Turgot ne les eût pas découverts aux environs de Thèbes, ont été mis au jour par lui-même en 1817, et qui fut publié l'année suivante le supplément de l'Hieroglyphic Dictionary". — Journal d'un voyage critique des Trévans de Jean M. Champollion sur ses découvertes, Paris, 1822, p. 69.

Quoted by M. Leitch in Dr. Young's works, 4 vols.
vol. III.

It is now time to hear something on the other side. Mr. Arago, after referring to the fact, just noticed by M. Poissonet, that M. de Guignes, in a memoir printed early in 1788, had stated that all the monuments or maps of the Egyptian inscriptions contained paper cuts.

"Any person who goes to the same work the argument is where this learned Orientalist substantiated the opinion that he had evidenced regarding the completely phantasmic nature of the Egyptian hieroglyphics. Young had, therefore, the privilege of one single point. It is to him we owe the first attempt at which had been made to demonstrate that the system of hieroglyphs, in order to give a phantasmic value to the language which composed the name of Phoenicia in the Hittite text.
I have sought for an example in which the word of order is not an invention may be substituted to that of gold and Young, and which had, on the other hand, an original opinion. This example I think I have observed, even if we entirely cut aside in the the quotations made from the Hittite the had distinctly stated before Dr. Young was interfered, on the latter had suggested that the Egyptian hieroglyphics are sometimes phonetic. Hooke did not directly prove his hypothesis: the proof of the phonetic values assigned by Young to different hieroglyphics cannot rest upon readings which are not yet made, and which cannot be made. From not knowing the composition of white light, Hooke had not an exact idea of the nature of interference, as Young, on his part, was deceived by a pretended syllabic or dissyllabic value of hieroglyphics. Young, by unanimous consent, is considered as the author of the theory of interference; and therefore, by a consequence which appears to me inevitable, Champollion ought to be regarded as the author of the discovery of hieroglyphics."—Mémoire de l'Institut, Acad. des Sciences, tom. xiii., lxxxvii., lxxxviii., lxxxix., xc. Quoted in N. Brit. Rev., Aug. 1855, art. vi., (p. v.).

Arago thinks that if Young had the choice of the two discoveries he would have left the hieroglyphics to Champollion. Dr. Peacock is not satisfied with the verdict of Arago: see the chapter in his Life of Young, (et seq.), entitled Hieroglyphical Researches. One of the latest decisions on this resata questio will perhaps be generally allowed to be also one of the fairest summaries of the merits of both claimants:

"Young and Champollion contended in their lifetime for the honour of having discovered the interpretation of hieroglyphics, and their friends have not ceased to maintain the controversy. Too much acrimony was displayed by both the principals, and Champollion was unquestionably guilty of unfairness in endeavouring to establish his claim. The truth is, that neither can claim the merit of undivided discovery. Young, indeed, first read the mysterious characters, but his reading was not correct until Champollion had taken it up. Certainly Champollion was unable to discover what Young discovered; but it is equally sure that Young could not apply the discovery, as did Champollion. It is most unfair to say that Young did little when he made the first step, and it is no less unfair to decri Champollion as a fortunate guesser, when we see how little has been effected since his death. The abilities of these two great men are distinct; and, while we admire the patience, the scientific skill, and the varied knowledge of Young, we need not undervalue the marvellous facility of conjecture, power of comparison, and acuity which distinguished Champollion."—*E. "An attack upon the principles of hieroglyphical interpretation has been recently made by Sir G. Cornewall Lewis, in his History of Ancient Astronomy, (Historical Survey of the Astronomy of the Ancients, Lon., 1862, 8vo.). This writer demurs to the premises on which the interpretation is based, and does not consider the first steps sufficiently proved, but holds that the results have been obtained by a series of vicious hypotheses, and that the Coptic by no means is the language of the ancient Egyptians. He also relies on the fact of the phonetic nature of the symbols not having been mentioned by the Greek writers. The inductive method of interpretation he considers unsound. The objections brought forward have, however, been strongly rebutted by the Egyptologists: the basis is considered sure from the bilingual monuments of the Rosetta Stone, obelisk of Philæ, contracts, rituals, and other documents; the truth of the phonetic value of the symbols is also thought to be proved beyond a doubt, by the fact of the sounds obtained from the first sources enabling the names of Roman emperors, Ptolemies, and even many Pharaohs, to be read with facility; while the fact of the Coptic being the remains of the ancient language of the country, is proved by its corresponding with the names of Egyptian objects and persons mentioned by Herodotus and other Greek authors. The truth of the interpretation is also defended by the results obtained, and the fact that these results enable the hierologists to read with ease documents and monuments newly discovered. Whatever doubt, in fact, may exist as to the minor details and more delicate shades of language, the labours of the last half-century have analyzed and established all the principal grammatical forms and three-fourths of the words of the old Egyptian language. The study of the hieroglyphics has been formally recognized by the learned Academies of Europe as a branch of Oriental learning."—Chambers's Encyc., Edin., v., 1880, 244, art. Hieroglyphics, q. v. for references. It was not until 1855 that the scientific world was gladdened by a selection of his Miscellaneous Works, in 3 vols. 8vo.,—vols. i. and ii. edited by George Peacock, D.D., vol. iii. by John Leitch,—and The Life of Thomas Young, M.D., by George Peacock, D.D., (q. v.) in 1 vol. 8vo. Dr. Peacock had contemplated nothing more than a short introductory memoir as a preface to the Works; but the intelligent and affectionate zeal of Dr. Young's widow (whose scientific culture has been commemorated by Arago) was rewarded by this valuable biography,—for which we should forever be grateful. But no more impressive testimony to the learning and industry of this truly great man can be presented than a list of the contents of the three volumes of his Miscellaneous Works, which are arranged as follows:

Contents. Vols. I, II. Scientific Memoirs, &c. Vol. I. at Brunswick, were among the early distinctions of the illustrious philosopher, let it not be forgotten that it is recorded to his honour that he was altogether free from that dissipation and vice to which this perilous season of life is peculiarly prone. Nor did his future course "unbecome the promise of his spring:" by one who had the best opportunities of knowing the truth, he is described as "a man in all the relations of life upright, kind-hearted, blameless. His domestic virtues were as exemplary as his talents were great. He was entirely free from either envy or jealousy, and the assistance which he gave to others engaged in the same line of research as himself was constant and unobscured. His morality through life had been pure, though unostentatious. His religious sentiments were by himself stated to be liberal, though orthodox. He had extensively studied the Scriptures, of which the precepts were deeply impressed upon his mind from his earliest years; and he evidenced the truth which he professed in an unbending course of usefulness and rectitude."—Hudson Gunnar. Memoir of Young, ut supra.

It is not unworthy of note that he possessed the very desirable advantages of a handsome person and prepossessing appearance. The theme is a delightful one, and I am loath to leave it; and I have a plausible excuse for delay in the adduction of a few eminent witnesses to the surpassing merits of this illustrious man. As early as 1815, Humboldt attested that "there was no field of human knowledge which Dr. Young has not cultivated with success; wherever he has passed, his path is marked with discoveries;" Arago declared that his works resemble the Transactions of a number of separate Academies, rather than the productions of a single mind; and our countryman Edward Everett, one of the best intellectual assessors I have ever known, pronounced him (N. Amer. Rev., xxxii. 110) "a man of matchless sagacity."

Zenger, John Peter, a native of Germany, commenced printing in the city of New York in 1726, and Nov. 3, (Oct. 5 on No. 1 is an error,) 1733, established the New York Weekly Journal, continued by him until his death in 1746, by his widow until 1748, and by his son until about 1752. The title was revived by John Holt in 1766. He was arrested, Nov. 17, 1734, for "printing and publishing several seditious libels" in the New York Weekly Journal, Nos. 7, 47, 48, and 49; tried in 1735, and defended by Andrew Hamilton, of Philadelphia, who contended, contrary to the charge of the bench, that the jury had a right to judge of the law as well as the fact,—the truth of the libel as well as the publication; and acquitted, to the great delight of the people and deep disgust of the court. Mr. Zincke remarks,

"It is a remarkable fact that the English spoken in America is not only very pure, but also is spoken with equal purity by all classes. This, in some measure, of course, results from the success of their educational efforts, and from the fact which arises out of it, that they are, almost to a man, a nation of readers. But not only is it the same language, without vulgarisms, in the mouth of all classes, but it is the same language, without any dialectical differences, over the whole continent."

VALEDICTORY: TO BE AFFIXED TO ALL EDITIONS OF THIS DICTIONARY.

I have this day (May 29, 1866) written the last line of the last page of a work which I projected in 1850 and commenced preparing for the printer on August 1, 1853.

My first emotion is a feeling of profound gratitude to that Almighty Being, "without whose help all labour is fruitless, and without whose grace all wisdom is folly," by whom my life has been prolonged and my health preserved until I have thus brought to a happy consummation the object of so much deep solicitude, absorbing anxiety, and anxious care.

S. AUSTIN ALLIBONE.

PS.—During the last four to five years the letters from the end of O to the end of Z, pp. 1480-2909, have been enlarged. I read this proof-sheet of the last page of the text (the Indexes are yet to come) October

The reader will find in vol. i. p. 85 of this Dictionary many testimonies to the value of this work. I am glad to be able to fortify these by some extracts from letters since addressed to me by an honorable friend. Hon. Horace Binney, LL.D., the head of the American bar, b. in Philadelphia Jan. 4, 1780, now in the full possession of his vigorous and well-constituted intellect, within six days of his ninety-second year.

"I must say, in references to Indexes generally, that I have come to regard a good book as worthless if it has not a pretty full Index. It is almost impossible, without such a guide, to reproduce or obtain the most striking thoughts or facts the book may contain, whether for citation or further consideration.
If I had my own way in the modification of the Dictionary Law, I think I would make the drafter's privilege depend materially on its having such a drawing. You may recollect generally that certain thoughts or facts are to be found in a certain book; but without a good Index such a recollection may hardly be more available than that of the cabin-boy, who knew where the ship's tea-kettle was, because he saw it fall overboard. In truth, a very large part of every man's reading falls overboard; and unless he has good Indexes he will never find it again.

"I have three books in my library which I value more than any other three, except the very books of which they are a verbal Index: Cruden's Concordance of the Bible, Mrs. Cowden Clarke's Concordance of Shakespeare, and Predergast's Concordance of Milton. We may not want such frequent soundings on the charts of most books; but the fuller they are, the more time they save, and the more accurately they remain the reader to explore and retain in memory the contents of the best authors for his present occasion."—The Librarian, 1846.

"I certainly think that the best book in the world would use the most to a good Index, and the worst book, if it had but a single good thought, it should be kept alive by it."—Lib. Mag., 1846. See BINNEY, HORACE, LL.D.; WHARTON, JESSE B.

As it is presumed, and often seems, to know the first or the best of every book, and that the first complete printed word from man's pen was the Hexameron Bible, which was first printed in 1455, and the first printed book with a date was the Index Primarius, 1457. It is perhaps here a notice of the Index Primarius as preserving one of the most important of Indexes.

The Index-maker however must not carry his business to the extreme and literal to the extent where he is an over-zealous and vigilant compiler to the end of the world.

"But Mr. Justice, the great merit of—your statement is the fact that Mr. Justice Best has not a great mind to sustain the witness."

I was the last word-book of the Dictionary of Law in the last day of 1847.

S. AUSTIN ALLIBONE
Philadelphia, Dec. 2, 1847.
